Nazi Troops Advance to French Soil in Attack Along a Four-Mile Front

Long Awaited Drive on Western Front Gets under Way on Northern Flank; War on Big Scale

By TAYLOR HENRY

Paris, Oct. 16 (AP)—Waves of Nazi troops in field gray today launched a long-awaited attack in force against French positions on the northern flank of the Western Front, drove the French out of German territory at one point and although thrown back still held a precarious foothold on French soil for the first time since the European war began.

A French communique acknowledged tonight that the Germans fought their way into the heights of Schneberg north of Apach on western slopes that reach into France.

The fighting lasted all day and as night fell the Germans apparently still were holding the heights of Schneberg north of Apach on western slopes that reach into France.

The 9:05 p. m. (3:05 p. m. EST.) communique of the French high command said merely that the Germans had withdrawn "to the north of Apach" after penetrating the village.

Attack on Long Front
Although the German attack covered a front of four miles, the main force of the blow was delivered at the junction of the French-German-Luxembourg frontiers on the extreme northern flank of the Western Front.

Here the French established positions during the first month of the war to prevent the Germans from driving through neutral Luxembourg territory to out-flank the whole French front.

Since the French had been holding advance positions some two miles inside German territory at this point, it appeared to military observers here that today's German attack obviously had driven the French back that distance.

The first real shock of the German attack hit the French on the Schneberg Heights, which form a bastion east of Apach.

Before the French were able to reorganize their defenses Nazi troops swept into French territory, occupied the first houses of the village of Apach.

Find Range of Germans
Immediately, however, the French said, French artillery found the range of the advancing Germans and forced them to halt on the outskirts of the little Lorraine village.

The French reformed their lines and drove the Germans back to positions 400 yards north of Apach, which left the Nazis holding a line 100 yards inside French territory.

Unconfirmed reports said that in other sectors on the northern flank the French withdrew their most advanced posts to main line positions on German territory to be better prepared to repulse German attacks.

Today's fighting undoubtedly was the heaviest on the Western Front, although no figures were available immediately on the number of men involved or the number of casualties.

Hungarian Nazi Putsch Crushed; 140 under Arrest

Seventeen Members of Parliament Marked for Death

By EDWARD KENNEDY

Budapest, Oct. 16 (AP)—A projected putsch by Hungarian Nazi extremists, which was said to include the assassination of 17 members of Parliament, today was reported crushed with the arrest of 140 members of the outlawed Hungarian "Death Legion."

Reliable informants said the Legion's program included not only acting against the government but a purge of the badly split Hungarian Nazi movement's more moderate leaders. News of the plot and its outcome was given first by Nazis of the latter classification and a number of deputies later said they had confirmed the reports.

Many Marked for Death
They said those marked for death included Kalman Hubay, whom the Hungarian Nazis chose to succeed Ferenc Szalasi, "Hungarian Hitler," after the latter was sentenced to three years in jail.

Although there was no immediate confirmation from official sources, Nazis said the projected putsch was crushed Saturday by the arrests and seizure of a large number of rifles, machine-guns and hand grenades which the group allegedly had assembled in its plan to overthrow the government and install a Nazi regime.

Hitler Hopes to Sink British Navy And End the War

Believed To Have Determined upon Plan To Force Surrender

By MELVIN K. WHITELEATHER

Berlin, Oct. 16 (AP)—Adolf Hitler appeared tonight to have determined on a policy of sinking or disabling one British warship after another until Great Britain would give in as the nation's enthusiasm rose to new heights over an announcement that the British battle cruiser Repulse had been torpedoed.

(A British communique said that "the German claim issued this afternoon that the attacker of his majesty's ship Royal Oak also attacked and badly damaged the battle cruiser Repulse is an absurd invention. x x x Neither the Repulse nor any other British warship has been damaged by hostile attack except as mentioned in the statements of the admiralty.")

Although a first communique said 32,000-ton Repulse had been severely damaged and put out of commission, a corrected communique later said "the same U-boat which sank the British battleship Royal Oak torpedoed the battleship Repulse."

Effect of Torpedo Unknown
Thus, with no further details given, the effect of the torpedo was left open. Explaining the reason for the change in wording of the communique, authorities said that "torpedoed" to them was a stronger expression than merely "damaged" or "disabled."

They cautioned, however, that it did not necessarily mean the Repulse was sunk.

The report that the Repulse had been torpedoed so soon after the sinking, announced Saturday, of the 29,150-ton Royal Oak caused Nazi confidence to increase by leaps and bounds. Germany would win the war, was the confident expression.

Dies Committee Seeks To Extend Life for a Year

Washington, Oct. 16 (AP)—The Dies Committee, asserting that "the international situation" had provided it with "hundreds of important leads," announced today that it would ask authority for another year of hearings on un-American activities.

The committee's power to hold investigations expires January 3, 1940. The House will be asked at the present special session of Congress to extend the authority to January 3, 1941.

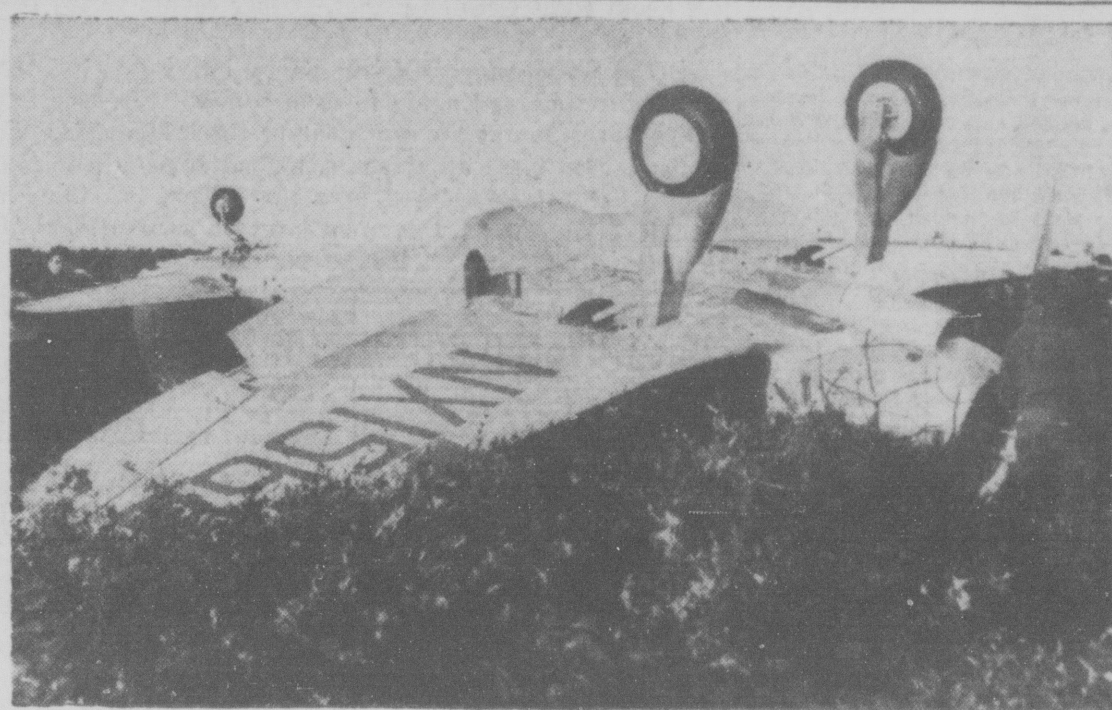

In a stormy session that shook the crystal chandeliers of the House caucus room, the committee examined two high-ranking Communists today as to their party's connections with the International Labor Defense and the International Workers Order.

Both Anna Damon, executive secretary of the ILO, and Max Bedacht, general secretary of the IWO, aroused the ire of the committee men with accusations of unfairness and impelled Chairman Dies (D-Tex) to gavel them down repeatedly as they attempted to volunteer statements.

As for actual testimony that would link the two organizations with the Communist party, the committee drew information that officials of the groups were party members, but made little headway when it tried to get the witnesses to acknowledge various articles in the Daily Worker, party newspaper, which indicated the alliance.

The committee sought to establish that ILO had been affiliated with the International Red Aid of Moscow, that it had defended political prisoners in Germany and Italy but never in Russia and that it had taken a stand against Fascism and Nazism but not against Communism. But to all questioning along this line Miss Damon firmly refused to return flat answers.

Billings Granted Commutation by Gov. Olson; Full Pardon Promised

Preparedness Day Defendant Freed with Approval of High Court

San Francisco, Oct. 16 (AP)—Gov. Culbert L. Olson late today commuted the sentence of Warren K. Billings to time served, following receipt of word from California Chief Justice William H. Waste that a majority of the court approved the action.

Billings was convicted September 21, 1916, of first degree murder in connection with the Preparedness Day parade bombing on Market street in which ten persons were killed and forty injured.

Governor Olson granted a full pardon to Tom Mooney, also serving a life sentence for the crime, as his first official act in office.

Delay In Billings' Case
He said he also had full confidence in Billings' innocence but could not pardon him at once because of a state law requiring approval of the State Supreme Court in cases where there had been a prior conviction.

The governor asserted he had asked for a pardon recommendation October 13 because he was convinced Billings was convicted upon perjured testimony and through suppression of evidence. He called the court's attention, he said, to the legal question arising from the fact that Billings was not charged, tried or convicted of having been previously convicted of a felony.

"It has heretofore been urged by a number of prominent members of the bar that this applicant stands convicted as merely a first offender," he said, "and that I, as chief executive, have the power to grant him (Continued on Page Two)

New York, Oct. 16.—The success with which German engineers combat their nation's critical warplane fuel problem may be the measure of victory or defeat in the European "war in the air."

German Version Of Plane Raid

Berlin, Oct. 16 (AP)—Field Marshal Goering's warplanes and Grand Admiral Raeder's submarines pressed a lightning war against England today.

In a surprise attack, German bombers appeared over the Firth of Forth in Scotland and, an official announcement said, "two British cruisers were hit by bombs of heavy size."

Another official announcement declared the British battle cruiser Repulse had been torpedoed in carrying out Adolf Hitler's apparent determination to sink or disable one British warship after another until Britain gives in.

A British announcement said but one British cruiser was hit, but admitted 35 casualties aboard three warships in the Firth of Forth. The German report of the battle cruiser Repulse being badly damaged was called an "absurd invention" by the British.

The German communique said two British pursuit planes which rose to fight off the German raiders of the Firth of Forth were shot down, but admitted two of Germany's own planes had failed to return from the raid.

British reports said four German planes were brought down; however, that the attack was carried out despite heavy English defense fire.

German Aviators Score Direct Hit on Warship, But Lose Four Bombers

Cruiser Southampton Damaged in Spectacular Attack on Firth of Forth Area of Scotland; Total of 35 Casualties Reported by Admiralty; Two German Fliers Captured, One Dies Later

By EDWIN STOUT

London, Oct. 16 (AP)—Scoring the first admitted bomb hit on a British warship since the European war began, German bombers today damaged the Cruiser Southampton in a spectacular attack on the vital Edinburgh and Firth of Forth area of Scotland.

The British Admiralty said the bombers caused thirty-five casualties aboard the Southampton and two other naval ships, the Cruiser Edinburgh and the Destroyer Mohawk.

A joint communique by the Air Ministry and the Admiralty said at least four of the twelve or fourteen Nazi raiders were downed by Royal Air Force fighters and anti-aircraft batteries during a fierce battle.

(A German announcement said two British cruisers were hit by bombs.)

STRIKE IN DIVE ATTACKS

The first German air raiders to reach Britain, the bombers struck in dive attacks in the face of heavy fire from ship and shore batteries.

The official announcement of the attack—issued some eight hours after the fight—said the Southampton, which escorted King George and Queen Elizabeth to Canada last Summer, was struck a glancing blow by a bomb.

The communique said the bow of the 9,100-ton cruiser was damaged slightly by the bomb.

Bomb splinters caused three casualties aboard the Southampton, seven on the 10,000-ton Edinburgh and 25 on the 1,870-ton Mohawk. The communique gave no further details on the "casualties."

It was said, however, the bombardment from the air failed to inflict serious damage to any of the warships.

WARNINGS NOT SOUNDED

Air raid warnings were not sounded in the area of the attack, across the Firth of Forth from Edinburgh. Throughout the raid train continued to cross the high bridge between Rosyth and the south bank of the Firth during the attack, giving passengers a chilling closeup of bombs exploding huge waterspouts in the water 450 feet below.

Shortly before the aerial attack on British warships was disclosed by the Admiralty and the Air Ministry, the Admiralty had denied a German claim that the Battle Cruiser Repulse was damaged by the same submarine which sank the Battleship Royal Oak Saturday.

Besides the slight damage to the bow of the Southampton, an empty admiral's barge and an empty pinnace moored alongside were sunk.

The British said one bomb fell near the Mohawk and burst on the water, the splinters hitting men on her deck. The Mohawk was returning to harbor from convoy escort.

The communique said the three ships were ready for the sea despite the raid.

FIERCE AIR BATTLE

The terse details of the communique revealed the fierceness of the air battle.

The first contact between British and German planes was off May Island at the entrance to the Firth and Forth when two German planes were intercepted. They were reported driven out to sea.

"Another enemy aircraft was engaged ten minutes later over Dalkeith," the communique said. "It fell in flames into the sea. Within a quarter of an hour a sharp combat took place off Crail, and a second raider crashed into the sea."

"A third German aircraft was destroyed in the pursuit."

(The communique gave no details of the downing of the fourth raider it reported was destroyed.)

GERMAN AVIATOR DIES

"Two German aviators have been rescued by one of our destroyers, one of whom has since died," the communique added. "No civilian casualties have been reported and none occurred in the Royal Air Force."

(The objective of the Nazi airmen apparently was Rosyth, a leading naval base, and the Forth bridge. The Firth of Forth itself is a gathering place for British naval ships and during the World War the British feared the Germans would wreck the high bridge, thus trapping part of the British fleet.)

The air raid occurred between 2 and 3 p. m.

The attack, at a point 500 miles from the coast of Germany, echoed predictions of a German drive against harbors and shipping while Scottish shipyards worked at top speed to keep Britain mistress of the seas.

Raiding planes were said in unofficial advices from (Continued on Page Two)

English Steamer Sunk by U-Boat, Crew Lands at South British Port

(By The Associated Press)

The report of a British merchant loss in the Atlantic, victim of a German submarine, capped war-on-the-seas developments yesterday (Monday) which included the safe arrival in New York of the British liners Cameronia and Samakia.

Thirty-two officers and crew of the 3,677-ton Whitby steamer Sena-ton, sunk Saturday, were landed at a southern British port. Survivors said a fireman was killed in the attack.

The Cameronia slipped into New York from Glasgow after a voyage that was "like going from lamp post to lamp post."

steady course which met groups of destroyers and small cruisers.

Coupled with this new British system was a French report that at least one of the U-boats which sank three French vessels during the weekend had been destroyed.

Another merchant ship casualty reported today was the sinking of the neutral Norwegian freighter Gressholm, a 621-ton wooden vessel. Her eight survivors arrived at Ymuden, Holland, on the Finnish steamer Emmi and reported their vessel was sunk by a mine last Friday with three deaths.

The Gressholm sinking was the 16th known Scandinavian loss and the sixth suffered by Norway. Her sinking sent the known tonnage loss to 342,438 and the known loss in lives to 1,578.

British losses amounted to thirty-sevens with the sinking of the Sena-ton.

GERMAN AVIATOR DIES

"Two German aviators have been rescued by one of our destroyers, one of whom has since died," the communique added. "No civilian casualties have been reported and none occurred in the Royal Air Force."

(The objective of the Nazi airmen apparently was Rosyth, a leading naval base, and the Forth bridge. The Firth of Forth itself is a gathering place for British naval ships and during the World War the British feared the Germans would wreck the high bridge, thus trapping part of the British fleet.)

The air raid occurred between 2 and 3 p. m.

English Steamer Sunk by U-Boat, Crew Lands at South British Port

(By The Associated Press)

The report of a British merchant loss in the Atlantic, victim of a German submarine, capped war-on-the-seas developments yesterday (Monday) which included the safe arrival in New York of the British liners Cameronia and Samakria.

Thirty-two officers and crew of the 3,677-ton Whitby steamer Seneaton, sunk Saturday, were landed at a southern British port. Survivors said a fireman was killed in the attack.

The Cameronia slipped into New York from Glasgow after a voyage that was "like going from lamp post to lamp post."

Capt. G. B. Kelly disclosed that his armed vessel had made the trip without convoy under a new system of patrols which dot the Atlantic from continent to continent.

He said the ship by radioed directions from the admiralty in a steady course which met groups of destroyers and small cruisers.

Coupled with this new British system was a French report that at least one of the U-boats which sank three French vessels during the weekend had been destroyed.

Another merchant ship casualty reported today was the sinking of the neutral Norwegian freighter Gressholm, a 621-ton wooden vessel. Her eight survivors arrived at Ynuiden, Holland, on the Finnish steamer Emmi and reported their vessel was sunk by a mine last Friday with three deaths.

The Gressholm sinking was the 16th known Scandinavian loss and the sixth suffered by Norway. Her sinking sent the known tonnage loss to 342,438 and the known loss in lives to 1,578.

British losses amounted to thirty-seven with the sinking of the Seneaton.

Sen. Thomas Says Borah and Clark Misquoted Speech

Protests Use Made of Radio Speech on Neutrality

Washington, Oct. 16. (AP) — Senator Thomas (D-Utah) protested in the Senate today what he said were published and publicly spoken misquotations of a radio address which he made Sept. 11, on the subject of neutrality.

The misquotation, he said, was compounded from parts of two widely separated sentences in his address, so that some newspapers and public speakers had attributed to him the statement: "We must give up this dream of impartiality, therefore neutrality. It is better to take sides and fight."

Thomas read from a printed copy of his speech excerpts in which he urged neutrality for the United States but contended impartiality "in a practical sense was utterly impossible," because whatever course were followed, one belligerent or another would be benefited.

He quoted his speech as saying at one point, "If neutrality means a crushing of world morality it is better that we take sides and fight, because fighting for a right is better than passive submission to a wrong."

Thomas said Senator Borah (R-Idaho) had the "misquotation" in a radio address without attributing it to anyone by name, and that subsequently two Chicago newspapers had named Thomas as the man to whom Borah referred.

Still later, he said, Senator Clark (D-Mo) was reported in a Chicago newspaper as attributing the "misquotation" to Senator Thomas, and at a public meeting in Philadelphia a speaker did the same.

As a result, he said, other newspapers attributed the statement to him and he received many letters "written in bitterness and hate."

Neither Borah nor Clark was present when Thomas spoke.

that as a result of the incident the government would outlaw all Nazi groups. There are 50 Nazis in Parliament.

Like Rumania Plot
The alleged plot was said to be similar in some respects to the recent abortive coup of the pro-Nazi Iron Guard in Rumania which resulted in the assassination of Premier Armand Calinescu.

Nazi sources said 200 persons so far had been linked to the plot, with police hunting for those still at large. Five leaders were said to have fled into Austria.

Officials said they regarded the "Death Legion" as the most pro-German of the Hungarian Nazi factions, the other elements having turned more nationalist and some showing rather anti-German tendencies.

Division among Hungarian Nazis widened last week as many adherents among Hungary's half-million Germans became alarmed that Adolf Hitler's repatriation program might mean their removal to the Reich.

Navy-Notre Dame Tickets All Sold

Cleveland, Oct. 16. (AP) — A sell-out of tickets for the Navy-Notre Dame football game here Saturday was reported today by Herbert Buckman, Cleveland stadium manager, who estimated total attendance at approximately 80,000.

Every ticket has been disposed of, he said, with the exception of several hundred held for high school students.

Hotels also reported they were completely booked and all week-end reservations on Detroit-Cleveland boats were taken tonight.

Ruble Fined $100 For Running Sunday Dance

Snow Hill, Md., Oct. 16. (AP) — Harvey Ruble, proprietor of Ocean City's pier dance hall for the last six summers, ran afoul of Maryland's ancient blue laws today.

A Worcester county circuit court jury convicted Ruble of a Sunday dancing charge and the court imposed the maximum penalty of $100 and costs.

Sheriff J. William Hall testified he raided the dance hall on the night of Aug. 13-A Sunday—and found some fifty couples dancing to the music of an orchestra.

Maryland's "blue laws" have been on the state statute books some two centuries.

Shirley Temple To Aid Community Drive

Hollywood, Oct. 16. (AP) — Shirley Temple, child film star, has agreed to help raise $3,221,720 for the Los Angeles community chest.

Shirley accepted appointment as honorary chairman of the charity drive. Her mother, Mrs. George Temple, said the actress would work actively in the campaign, particularly among school children.

Nazi Troops

today's Nazi drive was the beginning of a general attack or merely the strongest local action to date.

Nazis Use Heavy Tanks
First reports said the Germans used companies of heavy tanks in advance of infantry, which moved forward behind a rolling barrage of artillery fire reminiscent of World War days.

The sector where the action occurred had been one of the most active areas for German patrols for weeks.

The French communiqué reporting the action on the front added that during the second week of October 25,000 tons of goods destined for Germany had been "held up" by the French navy.

Claims Submarine Sunk
Another report of the French authorities was that at least one of the German submarines responsible for the sinking of three French cargo boats the past week had been sent to the bottom.

The French communiqué of information confirmed reports that three ships sunk since Oct. 12 were the French liners Bretagne, the Louisiana and the Auxiliary Navigation Company's oil tanker Emile Miguet.

"It can be said that at least one of the enemy submarines that sunk these ships is now at the bottom," the official announcement added.

709 Passengers and 40,000 Cases of Liquor Make Port

New York, Oct. 16. (AP) — Carrying 709 passengers and 40,000 cases of Scotch liquor, the British liner Cameronia, camouflaged and armed, slipped into New York harbor today.

Capt. G. B. Kelley reported an uneventful voyage from Glasgow. He said the crossing was made without convoy but with constant contact with ocean patrols conducted by the British.

The passengers included fifty-two Polish and Czech survivors of the Athenia disaster who were bound for Canada to work on farms and 246 Americans.

Theodore Roosevelt Favors Arms Embargo

New York, Oct. 16. (AP) — Col. Theodore Roosevelt, son of the former president, tonight urged that Congress maintain the arms embargo, asserting adoption of the administration's cash and carry plan would be "moving one step towards being involved ourselves."

In a speech prepared for radio delivery he added the one mission of the United States was to "defend our American democracy."

Speaking of cash and carry, he said: "We as a country will be geared up to furnish the munitions. Soon we will find that the nations buying munitions owe us a very large sum of money, and we will be told that the only way to make good our debt is to help them further."

Bite of Rat May Prove Fatal to Man

Baltimore, Oct. 16. (AP) — Helium and oxygen treatments were given today to J. T. O'Farrell, 70-year-old Westminster, Md., man suffering from a rare fever "probably traceable," Dr. Louis Krause said, to the bite of a rat.

Dr. Krause said the disease had been diagnosed as Haverhill fever, the fourth case on record in the United States.

O'Farrell was admitted to the hospital two weeks ago and at the outset ordinary treatments failed to have any effect. After the diagnosis, helium and oxygen treatments brought some improvement and O'Farrell now has "a good chance" to survive, Dr. Krause said.

Because of the infrequent appearance of the fever little is known about its origin, Dr. Krause reported. Physicians believe, Dr. Krause said, it can be transmitted to humans by rats and mice.

Lily Pons Helping British and French

Spokane, Oct. 16. (AP) — Lily Pons, diminutive French opera star, is doing her bit to help the Allied cause along.

Miss Pons, who arrived today for a concert engagement, immediately set up a Red Cross cash box, with a sign beside it, "autographs, 25 cents, for the French Red Cross."

Fresh Fish for Scots Provided by Germans

Edinburgh, Oct. 16. (AP) — Fresh fish were free today following the German air raid over the Firth of Forth.

When the two-hour aerial battle was over thirty Scots put out in boats and garnered a harvest of fish killed by the bomb explosions.

Steel Worker Killed

Elwood City, Pa., Oct. 16. (AP) — Struck in the chest by a hot billet of steel, John McKinney, 48, of San Francisco, was killed instantly today in the hot mill department of the National Tube Company plant. The billet punctured his heart and lungs.

Bingo Games Barred

World Interest Shown in Soviet Diplomatic Moves

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Staff Writer

Russia's diplomatic maneuvering from the Baltic to the Black Sea still holds first place for world attention despite the intensifying attacks by German U-boats and planes on Allied sea blockade lines.

Even the reports of a German attack on the northern flank of the French Western front failed to dislodge interest from the Russo-Finnish and Russo-Turkish negotiations. The outcome of these talks and of expected Russo-German "consultations" may finally disclose the role Russia is to play in the struggle.

Dispatches from all points in Europe indicate that Russia has met a decided check at both the Baltic and Balkan ends of her line of political advance westward. Neither Finland nor Turkey appears ready to yield to Russian domination as did Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania.

Four Countries United
Moreover, a Scandinavian bloc including Norway, Sweden and Denmark, seems forming to support Finland. All four countries are strengthening their frontier defenses and mobilizing their forces with the apparent determination to resist Russian political encroachments.

The alarm felt in Finland and Scandinavia over Russia's efforts to stage a diplomatic "Blitzkrieg" of her own must be a factor for serious consideration in any Russo-German "consultation." Berlin, confronted with Allied armies of ever-increasing strength ashore and with expanding Franco-British naval forces at sea, could not welcome any development that might throw the Scandinavian-Finnish group into the arms of the Allies.

Supply Lines in Danger
Should these nations be drawn into the struggle, German supply lines in the Baltic would be jeopardized. The German flank would be exposed to Allied air attack across the Baltic. For that reason there is widespread belief that Berlin is counseling Moscow to move with caution, to accept any Finnish or Turkish concessions which can be obtained without endangering the neutral status quo either in the Baltic or the Balkans.

For access to Rumanian oil is as vital to Germany as is her own open road to Swedish iron ores. It can hardly be doubted that Berlin has been watching the maneuvers of her Russian "friend" with increasing alarm. And there is still no hint from any quarter that the new Berlin-Moscow axis involves any Russian commitment to go to war with the Allies; or that it definitely prescribes the limits of Russian penetration westward or the spread of the Russian spheres of influence in the Baltic or the Balkans.

Neutrality Bill

consumming debate might be avoided by a final vote correspondingly hastened.

Their earlier predictions that general debate could be finished by the middle of this week appeared, however, to be over-optimistic some opposition senators were expected at least a fortnight more of formal speech-making before the bill could be taken up for amendment.

The formal speechmaking went forward today with, for most of the time, very few senators and a capacity gallery of spectators listening.

Senator Clark (D-Ida.) said the real purpose of repealing the embargo was to help Great Britain and France in their war with Germany. The Allies, he added, by refusing to consider Hitler's recent offer of peace had become the aggressors in the struggle, and consequently did not deserve American assistance.

Shipstead See Subterfuge
Senator Shipstead (R-Minn.) asserted that "to repeal the embargo at this time would be directly or indirectly to take sides" in the war. If, he said, "we are going to take sides, let us be open and above-board about it," and not "do it by subterfuge."

Senator Gillette (D-Iowa) told the Senate he would support the bill, if amendments were introduced to close a "loophole through which you could drive a truck." He referred, he said to amendments forbidding credits to private firms in belligerent countries and to prevent belligerent governments from calling in old securities from their citizens and marketing them in the United States.

Senator Capper (R-Kan.) said that "when we life the arms embargo and start selling war supplies it is almost equivalent to a declaration of war."

As introduced by Chairman Pittman of the Foreign Relations Committee, the bill would forbid loans to belligerent nations. However, this section includes a proviso giving President Roosevelt discretionary power to permit 90-day, non-renewable credits. It is the latter proviso which the administration leaders propose to eliminate.

Proponents of the provision argued that 90-day terms and cash when applied to international transactions, were pretty nearly identical. A short space of time had to be allowed, they said, for the settlement of the international balances.

German Aviators

Edinburgh to have dashed up the Firth from the North Sea at a high altitude. Against a bright clear sky they dodged the fire of coastal batteries and headed toward the Forth bridge some thirty miles inland.

MANY SHELLS EXPLODE

Defense firing grew heavier and pompom guns joined shore batteries in the shelling from both sides of the Firth. Many shells were seen exploding at a considerable height.

The attackers converged on objectives at a mooring near the Rosyth end of the mile long steel span.

Watchers from the south side of the Firth said the German bombers made "desperate attempts" to drop their bombs effectively.

One of the German planes was said to have been brought down in the Firth and the other two on land.

Of the crew in the plane which fell in the water, one was reported drowned, two to have been killed by bullets, and the fourth to have been rescued with an injured arm. Three of the crew of another ship were said to have been taken prisoner.

A resident of Dunfermline, north of Rosyth, said he saw about eight German planes. Other counts varied from six to twelve.

"The Germans were driven off by heavy fire, but they came back time and again to drop bombs," the proprietor of the Hawes inn at the south end of the bridge said. "The bombs caused huge waterspouts, but no damage was done."

"Other bombs dropped near the bridge, but this was not hit either, for trains went over it soon afterward," he added.

Finn Government Studies Latest Soviet Proposal

Delegation Expected To Report Back to Moscow in a Few Days

By LYNN HEINZERLING
Helsinki, Oct. 16. (AP) — The Finnish government today studied undisclosed Soviet Russian proposals brought back by its mission to Moscow and a spokesman said later we remain calm and believe a solution can be found.

There was no evidence of slackening in defense measures, however, and it was announced more air raid drills were planned shortly. These steps were described by the government as a precaution against possible violation of "our independence and neutrality."

"The Russian demands present serious questions," the spokesman said, "but a practical solution can be found, in our opinion, if both sides show good will. We are trying so far as possible to understand the proposals made by the Soviet and find a way to a peaceful solution."

Most Serious Crisis
The return to Moscow of Dr. Juho Kusti Paasikivi, head of the Finnish mission, was not expected for several days. Meanwhile government observers described the negotiations as presenting the most serious crisis in the history of the republic.

Dr. Paasikivi first held a conference with Foreign Minister Elias Eriko and then a longer meeting with President Kyoesti Kallio and other government representatives after he returned this morning. Technical experts who accompanied Paasikivi to the Kremlin conferences were present at the meetings.

Head of Mission Silent
Paasikivi, who appeared stern-faced in a meeting with newspapermen, declined to comment on the conferences, confining his remarks to Moscow's "fine weather" and his visit to the agricultural show.

He said Joseph Stalin and Commissar of Foreign Affairs Vyacheslav Molotov were active in the negotiations, adding that the conversations were "very pleasant."

The cabinet planned another session tomorrow on the proposals. A government spokesman expressed no concern at a report that fifteen Russian warships were anchored at Tallinn, Estonian harbor a few miles across the Gulf of Finland from Helsinki.

The spokesman said it was "in accordance with the Soviet agreement with Estonia."

mander apparently was attempting to attack all British ships he could find before returning to his home base to make a report—and receive the Iron Cross for his achievement.

Submarines did not steal all the limelight. Anti-aircraft batteries in the region of Mainz and Frankfurt on the Main, the high command reported, last night brought down a British Whitney bombing plane and a French Potez sixty-three scouting ship. The announcement said one Frenchman and one Briton were killed and three British and two French fliers taken prisoners.

No Ghost Town, Says Mt. Savage To School Board

Citizens Committee Denounces Proposals Advanced by Kopp

The Mt. Savage Citizens Committee issued a statement last night, this time denouncing the proposals of the Allegheny County Board of Education to meet the school "situation" there.

The statement follows: "Mt. Savage taxpayers and citizens emphatically denounced the proposals of Superintendent Kopp and the Allegheny County Board of Education, as recently submitted to meet the urgent school needs of the community."

As regarding the unsafe building, Superintendent Kopp and the Board stated on Sept. 26: "As a result of the present complaints, the Board will again send to the Mt. Savage school, a competent contractor and engineer to report on its present condition. If the report indicates that the building is unsafe, the Board will immediately take steps to remedy the situation."

Delay May Cost Lives
"After the passing of twenty days, we ask, has a competent contractor and engineer made this inspection. Delay may be costly. Lives of innocent children might be snuffed out because of neglect. If the inspection has been made, why has not the Board made known its findings?"

"As to the high school department, Superintendent Kopp relates: 'The solution which the representatives of your community proposed would be the erection of a new school building to provide the above mentioned facilities at a cost of more than $200,000, and to that end a bill was passed by the last session of the Maryland General Assembly, providing for a bond issue to build a new school building at Mt. Savage, the provision of funds being contingent upon Federal aid.'

Whose Fault?
"Mt. Savage was only one of a number of communities of the county that would have benefited from this program outlined in the above mentioned bill. The schedule as submitted by the Board called for an expenditure of $75,000. Federal aid not being available, the bill is worthless. If and when this program must be completed under the present set-up, the taxpayers will be obliged to bear the total cost, notwithstanding the fact that Federal aid was available until recently. Who is accountable for the neglect?"

Want No Bus Tragedy
"Superintendent Kopp further suggests that the senior department of the high school be transported to and from Frostburg. Certainly he is aware that the stretch of road between Mt. Savage and Frostburg is one of the most hazardous in the county. It might be well to remind him of the school-bus tragedy of War, West Virginia, that occurred just recently. The press relates that in this horrible accident six students and the bus driver were killed and seventy-one injured."

Mt. Savage No Ghost Town
"A local radio news commentator recently stated that the reason for neglect so far as a new high school was concerned, was that the population of Mt. Savage was on the decline. Any 'ghost town' idea is readily dispelled if we take a look at the census figures for the years 1920 and 1930. Mt. Savage shows a decrease of only eighty-five for the ten-year period, while the other bigger towns (Cumberland not included) show decreases ranging from 152 to 700 persons. These figures are taken from the Maryland manual, and are conclusive evidence that the percentage of decrease is noticeably less in Mt. Savage than that of the other leading communities of the county. There is every reason to believe that a census today would show a decided increase over the last."

Makes Sewer Offer
William P. Roeder, president-treasurer of the Cement Products Co., yesterday notified the mayor and city council that he is willing to foot the bill for two hundred feet of sewer extended on Piedmont avenue providing the city extends the water line. City officials estimated that the water line extension would cost approximately $300. Mr. Roeder's request was referred to the water commissioner and engineer.

Sen. Thomas Says Borah and Clark Misquoted Speech

Protests Use Made of Radio Speech on Neutrality

Washington, Oct. 16 (AP)—Senator Thomas (D-Utah) protested in the Senate today what he said were published and publicly spoken misquotations of a radio address which he made Sept. 11, on the subject of neutrality.

Nazi Troops

today's Nazi drive was the beginning of a general attack or merely forward behind a rolling barrage of artillery fire reminiscent of World War days.

The sector where the action occurred had been one of the most active areas for German patrols for weeks.

The French communiqué reporting the action on the front added that during the second week of October 25,000 tons of goods destined for Germany had been "held up" by the French navy.

Claims Submarine Sunk
Another report of the French authorities was that at least one of the German submarines responsible for the sinking of three French cargo boats the past week had been sent to the bottom.

The French communiqué of information confirmed reports that three ships sunk since Oct. 12 were the French liners Bretagne, the Louisiana and the Auxiliary Navigation Company's oil tanker Emile Miguet.

"It can be said that at least one of the enemy submarines that sunk these ships is now at the bottom," the official announcement added.

709 Passengers and 40,000 Cases of Liquor Make Port

New York, Oct. 16 (AP)—Carrying 709 passengers and 40,000 cases of Scotch liquor, the British liner Cameronia, camouflaged and armed, slipped into New York harbor today.

Capt. G. B. Kelley reported an uneventful voyage from Glasgow. He said the crossing was made without convoy but with constant contact with ocean patrols conducted by the British.

The passengers included fifty-two Polish and Czech survivors of the Athenia disaster who were bound for Canada to work on farms and 246 Americans.

Theodore Roosevelt Favors Arms Embargo

New York, Oct. 16 (AP)—Col. Theodore Roosevelt, son of the former president, tonight urged that Congress maintain the arms embargo, asserting adoption of the administration's cash and carry plan would be "moving one step towards being involved ourselves."

In a speech prepared for radio delivery he added the one mission of the United States was to "defend our American democracy."

Speaking of cash and carry, he said:

"We as a country will be geared up to furnish the munitions. Soon we will find that the nations buying munitions owe us a very large sum of money, and we will be told that the only way to make good our debt is to help them further."

Bite of Rat May Prove Fatal to Man

Baltimore, Oct. 16 (AP)—Helium and oxygen treatments were given today to J. T. O'Farrell, 70-year-old Westminster, Md., man suffering from a rare fever "probably traceable," Dr. Louis Krause said, to the bite of a rat.

Dr. Krause said the disease had been diagnosed as Haverhill fever, the fourth case on record in the United States.

O'Farrell was admitted to the hospital two weeks ago and at the outset ordinary treatments failed to have any effect. After the diagnosis, helium and oxygen treatments brought some improvement and O'Farrell now has "a good chance" to survive, Dr. Krause said.

Because of the infrequent appearance of the fever little is known about its origin, Dr. Krause reported. Physicians believe, Dr. Krause said, it can be transmitted to humans by rats and mice.

Spokane, Oct. 16 (AP)—Lily Pons, diminutive French opera star, is doing her bit to help the Allied cause along.

Miss Pons, who arrived today for a concert engagement, immediately set up a Red Cross cash box, with a sign beside it, "autographs, 25 cents, for the French Red Cross."

Fresh Fish for Scots Provided by Germans

Edinburgh, Oct. 16 (AP)—Fresh fish were free today following the German air raid over the Firth of Forth.

Associated Press Staff Writer

Russia's diplomatic maneuvering from the Baltic to the Black Sea still holds first place for world attention despite the intensifying attacks by German U-boats and planes on Allied sea blockade lines.

Even the reports of a German attack on the northern flank of the French Western front failed to distract interest from the Russo-Finnish and Russo-Turkish negotiations. The outcome of these talks and of expected Russo-German "consultations" may finally disclose the role Russia is to play in the struggle.

Dispatches from all points in Europe indicate that Russia has met a decided check at both the Baltic and Balkan ends of her line of political advance westward. Neither Finland nor Turkey appears ready to yield to Russian domination as did Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania.

Four Countries United

Moreover, a Scandinavian neutral bloc including Norway, Sweden and Denmark, seems forming to support Finland. All four countries are strengthening their frontier defenses and mobilizing their forces with the apparent determination to resist Russian political encroachments.

The alarm felt in Finland and Scandinavia over Russia's efforts to stage a diplomatic "Blitzkrieg" of her own must be a factor for serious consideration in any Russo-German "consultation." Berlin, confronted with Allied armies of ever-increasing strength ashore and with expanding Franco-British naval forces at sea, could not welcome any development that might throw the Scandinavian-Finnish group into the arms of the Allies.

Supply Lines in Danger

Should these nations be drawn into the struggle, German supply lines in the Baltic would be jeopardized. The German flank would be exposed to Allied air attack across the Baltic. For that reason there is widespread belief that Berlin is counselling Moscow to move with caution, to accept any Finnish or Turkish concessions which can be obtained without endangering the neutral status quo either in the Baltic or the Balkans.

For access to Rumanian oil is as vital to Germany as is her own open road to Swedish iron ores. It can hardly be doubted that Berlin has been watching the maneuvers of her Russian "friend" with increasing alarm. And there is still no hint from any quarter that the new Berlin-Moscow axis involves any Russian commitment to go to war with the Allies; or that it definitely prescribes the limits of Russian penetration westward or the spread of the Russian sphere of influence in the Baltic or the Balkans.

Most Serious Crisis

The return to Moscow of Dr. Juho Kusti Paasikivi, head of the Finnish mission, was not expected for several days. Meanwhile government observers described the negotiations as presenting the most serious crisis in the history of the republic.

Dr. Paasikivi first held a conference with Foreign Minister Eljas Erko and then a longer meeting with President Kyyosti Kallio and other government representatives after he returned this morning.

Technical experts who accompanied Paasikivi to the Kremlin conferences were present at the meetings.

Head of Mission Silent

Paasikivi, who appeared stern-faced in a meeting with newspapermen, declined to comment on the conferences, confining his remarks to Moscow's "fine weather" and his visit to the agricultural show.

He said Joseph Stalin and Commissar of Foreign Affairs Vyacheslav Molotov were active in the negotiations, adding that the conversations were "very pleasant."

The cabinet planned another session tomorrow on the proposals.

A government spokesman expressed no concern at a report that fifteen Russian warships were anchored at Tallinn, Estonian harbor a few miles across the Gulf of Finland from Helsinki.

The spokesman said it was "in accordance with the Soviet agreement with Estonia."

Shipstead See Subterfuge

Senator Shipstead (D-Minn) asserted that "to repeal the embargo at this time would be directly or indirectly to take sides" in the war. If, he said, "we are going to take sides, let's be open and above-board about it," and not "do it by subterfuge."

Senator Gillette (D-Iowa) told the Senate he would support the bill, if amendments were introduced to close a "loophole through which you could drive a truck."

He referred, he said to amendments forbidding credits to private firms in belligerent countries and to prevent belligerent governments from calling in old securities from their citizens and marketing them in the United States.

Senator Capper (R-Kan) said that "when we life the arms embargo and start selling war supplies it is almost equivalent to a declaration of war."

As introduced by Chairman Pittman of the Foreign Relations Committee, the bill would forbid loans to belligerent nations. However, this section includes a proviso giving President Roosevelt discretion to permit 90-day, non-renewable credits. It is the latter proviso which the administration leaders propose to eliminate.

Proponents of the provision argued that 90-day terms and cash when applied to international transactions, were pretty nearly identical. A short space of time had to be allowed, they said, for the settlement of the international balances.

German Aviators

Edinburgh to have dashed up the Firth from the North Sea at a high altitude. Against a bright clear sky they dodged the fire of coastal batteries and headed toward the Forth bridge some thirty miles inland.

MANY SHELLS EXPLODE

Defense firing grew heavier and pom-pom guns joined shore batteries in the shelling from both sides of the Firth. Many shells were seen exploding at a considerable height.

The attackers converged on objectives at a mooring near the Rosyth end of the mile long steel span.

Watchers from the south side of the Firth said the German bombers made "desperate attempts" to drop their bombs effectively.

One of the German planes was said to have been brought down in the Firth and the other two on land.

Of the crew in the plane which fell in the water, one was reported drowned, two to have been killed by bullets, and the fourth to have been rescued with an injured arm. Three of the crew of another ship were said to have been taken prisoner.

A resident of Dunfermline, north of Rosyth, said he saw about eight German planes. Other counts varied from six to twelve.

"The Germans were driven off by heavy fire, but they came back time and again to drop bombs," the proprietor of the Hawes inn at the south end of the bridge said. "The bombs caused huge waterspouts, but no damage was done. Other bombs dropped near the bridge, but this was not hit either, for trains went over it soon afterward," he added.

Finn Government Studies Latest Soviet Proposal

BY LYNN HEINZERLING

Helsinki, Oct. 16 (AP)—The Finnish government today studied undisclosed Soviet Russian proposals brought back by its mission to Moscow and a spokesman said later "we remain calm and believe a solution can be found."

There was no evidence of slackening in defense measures, however, and it was announced more air raid drills were planned shortly. These steps were described by the government as a precaution against possible violation of "our independence and neutrality."

"The Russian demands present serious questions," the spokesman said, "but a practical solution can be found, in our opinion, if both sides show good will. We are trying so far as possible to understand the proposals made by the Soviet and find a way to a peaceful solution."

The return to Moscow of Dr. Juho Kusti Paasikivi, head of the Finnish mission, was not expected for several days. Meanwhile government observers described the negotiations as presenting the most serious crisis in the history of the republic.

No Ghost Town, Says Mt. Savage To School Board

Citizens Committee Denounces Proposals Advanced by Kopp

The Mt. Savage Citizens Committee issued another statement last night, this time denouncing the proposals of the Allegheny County Board of Education to meet the school "situation" there.

The statement follows: "Mt. Savage taxpayers and citizens emphatically denounced the proposals of Superintendent Kopp and the Allegheny County Board of Education, as recently submitted to meet the urgent school needs of the community."

As regarding the unsafe building, Superintendent Kopp and the Board stated on Sept. 26: "As a result of the present complaints, the Board will again send to the Mt. Savage school, a competent contractor and engineer to report on its present condition. If the report indicates that the building is unsafe, the Board will immediately take steps to remedy the situation."

Delay May Cost Lives
"After the passing of twenty days, we ask, has a competent contractor and engineer made this inspection. Delay may be costly. Lives of innocent children might be snuffed out because of neglect. If the inspection has been made, why has not the Board made known its findings?"

"As to the high school department, Superintendent Kopp relates: 'The solution which the representatives of your community proposed was the erection of a new school building to provide the above mentioned facilities at a cost of more than $200,000, and to that end a bill was passed by the last session of the Maryland General Assembly, providing for a bond issue to build a new school building at Mt. Savage, the provision of funds being contingent upon Federal aid.'

Whose Fault?
"Mt. Savage was only one of a number of communities of the county that would have benefited from this program outlined in the above mentioned bill. The schedule as submitted by the Board called for an expenditure of $575,000. Federal aid not being available, the bill is worthless. If and when this program must be completed under the present set-up, the taxpayers will be obliged to bear the total cost, notwithstanding the fact that Federal aid was available until recently. Who is accountable for the neglect?"

Want No Bus Tragedy
"Superintendent Kopp further suggests that the senior department of the high school be transported to and from Frostburg. Certainly he is aware that the stretch of road between Mt. Savage and Frostburg is one of the most hazardous in the county. It might be well to remind him of the school-bus tragedy of War, West Virginia, that occurred just recently. The press relates that in this horrible accident six students and the bus driver were killed and seventy-one injured."

ML Savage No Ghost Town
"A local radio news commentator recently stated that the reason for neglect so far as a new high school was concerned, was that the population of Mt. Savage was on the decline. Any 'ghost town' idea is readily dispelled if we take a look at the census figures for the years 1920 and 1930. Mt. Savage shows a decrease of only eighty-five for the ten-year period, while the other bigger towns (Cumberland not included) show decreases ranging from 152 to 700 persons. These figures are taken from the Maryland manual, and are conclusive evidence that the percentage of decrease is noticeably less in Mt. Savage than that of the other leading communities of the county. There is every reason to believe that a census today would show a decided increase over the last."

Makes Sewer Offer

William P. Roeder, president-treasurer of the Cement Products Co., yesterday notified the mayor and city council that he is willing to foot the bill for two hundred feet of sewer extended on Piedmont avenue providing the city extends the water line. City officials estimated that the water line extension would cost approximately $300. Mr. Roeder's request was referred to the water commissioner and engineer.

Judges Ask Commutation

Judge Waste's letter to the governor said: "In the matter of the application of Warren K. Billings, Folsom prisoner No. 10699 for executive clemency, you are advised that a majority of judges of the Supreme Court recommend a commutation of the sentence of the applicant to the time served."

The court acted adversely on a pardon application for Billings in 1930, with one dissent.

The prior conviction against Billings was a two-year sentence imposed for transportation of dynamite to Sacramento. He insisted at the time he had merely delivered a suitcase at the bidding of others and did not know it contained explosive.

Governor Olson declared he still contemplated a pardon for Billings, so that his status as a restored citizen would be the same of Mooney's. He would look into his legal powers in that regard at a later time, he said, meanwhile Billings would have his freedom.

26 Homeless in Apartment House Fire

Pittsburgh, Oct. 16 (AP)—Twenty-six persons, twelve of them children, fled in night clothing into near freezing temperature early today when fire broke out in their three-story apartment building home in Schenley Hollow.

Ear Afflictions In Children Have Hopeful Prospects

Deafness Coming in Adult
Life, However, Is a
Different Story

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

Deafness is relative. Since the introduction of the audiometer it has been possible to measure the amount of deafness and record it quite accurately. An ear-piece is clamped over the ear, the other ear is stopped and sounds of different loudness are produced, beginning with the faintest sound heard by the normal ear. The person being tested makes a sign at the first sound heard. The other ear is tested in the same way.

The degrees of sound are called decibels. Loss of nine decibels is considered the point at which hearing handicap occurs. In other words, it is the lowest degree of deafness. Tests of school children show that about six per cent have a loss of nine decibels or more. It is fair to assume that the adult population contains at least as large a number of relatively deaf persons.

In childhood the causes of deafness are, for the most part, due to infection—infection of the ear following infectious diseases, such as scarlet fever and measles, or from infected adenoids and tonsils, or chronic infection of the nose. These cases present fairly hopeful prospects if not for the relief of the deafness, at least for prevention of further impairment. If nothing else can be done, at least these children can be taught lip reading and other aids, and can be segregated in schools so that the rare not in competition with their more favored companions.

Different Story

The deafness which comes on in adult life is a different story. It is slowly progressive, beginning with head noises and ringings that are often more annoying than the deafness itself. The cause is otosclerosis, a replacement of new spongy bone around the internal ear which fixes the small bones of the middle ear so that the vibration and the conduction of sound are impossible. I have long thought that the principal treatment of this type of deafness is psychological rather than medical. The author of a recent textbook says, I think wisely: "The patient must be encouraged to learn lip reading as soon as the diagnosis has been made; while there is still useful hearing, it is easy to learn, and when expertly done, replaces the lost hearing in all situations when the lips of the speaker can be seen by the patient. For other purposes a hearing aid of the electric type, with a bone conduction receiver, is most helpful."

Modern surgery is much less efficient here than in the organs of sight. Nature has put its eye on the surface of the body, but it has locked away hearing in the fastnesses of a protio of solid bone. But experimental surgical researchers hold out the hope that some practical method may soon be perfected.

Advice of Essayist

I have written of some of the trials of such persons. There may be added here the advice of the charming essayist, E. S. Martin: "A deaf man who really wants to be good has it in his favor that there are a number of sinful things he cannot do to advantage. He cannot play poker, he cannot flirt, he has even a greater incentive to be temperate than most men, for carousals are dull sport to a deaf man. He had better be good. He may be virtuous and still not be happy—whatever the copybooks declare—but certainly, being deaf, he has a great deal better chance of being happy by sticking to virtue than by trying to be successfully wicked."

Man and Girl Found Dead in a Cabin

Salisbury, Md., Oct. 16 (AP)—James T. Zimmerman, 27, Seaford, Del., steel worker, and Grace Wilkerson, 18, of Salisbury, were found dead in a tourist cabin on the Salisbury-Delmar road.

State Policeman M. T. Bohler said fumes from an unlighted gas heater, turned on full, had asphyxiated the couple. Bohler said Frank Zimmerman, brother of the dead man, discovered the bodies.

William Allen White Backs Embargo Repeal

New York, Oct. 16 (AP)—William Allen White, Emporia, Kas., editor, supported repeal of the arms embargo act in a speech over the Columbia broadcasting system.

"The cash and carry law is America's peaceful contribution to the world's inevitable struggle that is gathering on the shores of the western world," he said. "Few measures before Congress have had the overwhelming support of the people of our country."

"Of course, no law will keep us out of war. The present embargo law would probably involve us in a war quicker than the cash and carry law."

"Germany and Russia have not joined hands and arms by accident. They are not menacing the west as imperialists casually allied going forth to conquer. They are facing and threatening the Western Democracies because the Nazis and Bolsheviks can not live apart in a free world."

Judge in Quandry Over Fishing Case

Salisbury, Md., Oct. 16 (AP)—When a former president of the Tri-State Sportsmen's Club, now a deputy game warden, arrested a guest of the incumbent Tri-State president, it all added up to a knotty problem for People's Court Judge E. Sheldon Jones.

William T. Hutchings, president of the club, invited Dick Porter, manager of the Syracuse International League ball club, and William Rawson, of Salisbury, to a fishing trip on Hutchings's estate.

Came Deputy Warden Merwyn E. Watson, ex-Tri-State president, and charged Rawson with unlicensed fishing.

Testimony before Judge Jones developed that:

Deputy Watson contended all persons angling above tidewater must obtain licenses, except property owners fishing from their own property, or the owners' families, tenants and employees fishing from owners' property.

Hutchings claimed he owned the pond where his party was fishing, the land around it, and all the water rights.

Watson said the state had stockpiled the pond with bass; Hutchings said two bass were "given me personally" by game wardens, and they weren't for restocking purposes, because the state could not stock private and posted property with game or game fish.

With no legal precedent to guide his decision in the case, Judge Jones took it under advisement.

Poles Pay Tribute To Memory of Pulaski

New York, Oct. 16 (AP)—In memory of a Polish exile who helped America win its revolution, Casimir Pulaski, thousands of Polish-Americans from a dozen states paraded two miles up Fifth avenue Sunday.

The ceremony culminated a week of observances throughout the city—the nation's largest Polish center, with a Polish-born population of over 200,000. Pulaski died Oct. 11, 1779, in the siege of Savannah, after distinguishing himself in several battles, organizing the "Pulaski Legion," and receiving, by order of Congress, the rank of Brigadier General and Chief of Cavalry in the American army.

Delegates from Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Connecticut and other states were among the marching organizations, which consisted principally of the Polish Legion of American Veterans, the Polish Army War Veterans, their auxiliaries and Polish-American societies.

Gov. Herbert Lehman, Lieut.-Gov. Charles Poletti, Polish Ambassador Jerzy Potoski and others reviewed the parade at 64th street.

Salesman Slugged And Left for Dead

New York, Oct. 16 (AP)—A Long Island city auto salesman, demonstrating a car to a prospective customer, was slugged, hurled down a flight of stairs, trussed up in a trunk and left for dead in a Queens back yard.

Police, summoned by a mysterious telephone call that they would find "a dead man" there, found the salesman—Harry B. McGill, 55—unconscious. His skull was fractured but he was expected to recover. Assistant District Attorney John Krogman announced that a 20-year old button machine operator, unemployed for two weeks, had been taken into custody and had admitted committing the assault because he found he did not have enough money—$450—to buy the car.

After leaving the salesman in the trunk, the prosecutor quoted the man as saying, he picked up a girl friend and drove with her to Bear Mountain—stopping en route to make the telephone call—returning at 6 o'clock this morning, when detectives grabbed him.

The button machine operator was brought to Manhattan police headquarters and booked as Francis Humel, 20, on charges of assault and robbery.

Texas landowners in 1938 received $44,000,000 in oil royalties.

The monthly report of the Community Chest and a feature program of The Cumberland Girl Scouts will be given over WTBO at 4:45 this afternoon. Advertisement N-T Oct. 17

Ear Afflictions In Children Have Hopeful Prospects

Deafness Coming in Adult
Life, However, Is a
Different Story

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

Deafness is relative. Since the introduction of the audiometer it has been possible to measure the amount of deafness and record it quite accurately. An ear-piece is clamped over the ear, the other ear is stopped and sounds of different loudness are produced, beginning with the faintest sound heard by the normal ear. The person being tested makes a sign at the first sound heard. The other ear is tested in the same way.

The degrees of sound are called decibels. Loss of nine decibels is considered the point at which hearing handicap occurs. In other words it is the lowest degree of deafness. Tests of school children show that about six per cent have a loss of nine decibels or more. It is fair to assume that the adult population contains at least as large a number of relatively deaf persons.

In childhood the causes of deafness are, for the most part, due to infection—infection of the ear following infectious diseases, such as scarlet fever and measles, or from infected adenoids and tonsils, or chronic infection of the nose. These cases present fairly hopeful prospects if not for the relief of the deafness, at least for prevention of further impairment. If nothing else can be done, at least these children can be taught lip reading and other aids, and can be segregated in schools so that the rare but in competition with their more favored companions.

Different Story

The deafness which comes on in adult life is a different story. It is slowly progressive, beginning with head noises and ringings that are often more annoying than the deafness itself. The cause is otosclerosis, a replacement of new spongy bone around the internal ear which fixes the small bones of the middle ear so that the vibration and the conduction of sound are impossible.

I have long thought that the principal treatment of this type of deafness is psychological rather than medical. The author of a recent textbook says I think wisely: "The patient must be encouraged to learn lip reading as soon as the diagnosis has been made; while there is still useful hearing, it is easy to learn, and, when expertly done, replaces the lost hearing in all situations when the lips of the speaker can be seen by the patient. For other purposes a hearing aid of the electric type, with a bone conduction receiver, is most helpful."

Modern surgery is much less efficient here than in the organs of sight. Nature has put her eye on the surface of the body, but it has locked away hearing in the fastnesses of a proto of solid bone. But experimental surgical researchers hold out the hope that some practical method may soon be perfected.

Advice of Essayist

I have written of some of the trials of such persons. There may be added here the advice of the charming essayist, E. S. Martin: "A deaf man who really wants to be good has it in his favor that there are a number of sinful things he cannot do to advantage. He cannot play poker, he cannot flirt, he has even a greater incentive to be temperate than most men, for carousals are dull sport to a deaf man. He had better be good. He may be virtuous and still not be happy—whatever the copybooks declare—but certainly, being deaf, he has a great deal better chance of being happy by sticking to virtue than by trying to be successfully wicked."

State Policeman M. T. Bohler said fumes from an unlighted gas heater, turned on full, had asphyxiated the couple. Bohler said Frank Zimmerman, brother of the dead man, discovered the bodies.

William Allen White Backs Embargo Repeal

New York, Oct. 16 (AP)—William Allen White, Emporia, Kas., editor, supported repeal of the arms embargo act in a speech over the Columbia broadcasting system.

"The cash and carry law is America's peaceful contribution to the world's inevitable struggle that is gathering on the shores of the western world," he said. "Few measures before Congress have had the overwhelming support of the people of our country."

"Of course, no law will keep us out of war. The present embargo law would probably involve us in a war quicker than the cash and carry law."

"Germany and Russia have not joined hands and arms by accident. They are not menacing the west as imperialists casually allied going forth to conquer. They are facing and threatening the Western Democracies because the Nazis and Bolsheviks can not live apart in a free world."

The Changing Tax Picture

THE CHANGE that has come over the American tax picture since payroll taxes have been added to the revenue system is shown in an analysis of 1938 tax receipts of federal, state and local governments just made by the Federation of Tax Administrators. The data used in the analysis came from the federal Treasury department.

Only the property tax and the income tax brought in more governmental revenue in 1938 than the payroll tax. The second year in which it was collected the payroll tax yielded $1,500,000,000, or ten per cent of the total American tax yield. In its first year, 1937, it amounted to about $800,000,000, or five per cent.

The $14,811,000,000 of American taxes raised during the fiscal year ending in 1938 came from ten major types of taxes, according to the analysis.

Property taxes accounted for $4,745,000,000—thirty-two per cent of the total—in 1938. This was four per cent less than in 1937, and nine per cent under 1932.

Income tax collections, in second place, totaled $3,242,000,000, which was twenty-two per cent of the total tax yield.

The various general and special sales and occupational taxes together yielded a total of $3,842,000,000, or twenty-six per cent of all taxes last year. This figure included general sales, liquor, tobacco, gasoline and other special sales taxes; federal stamp taxes and manufacturers' excises, gross receipts taxes and licenses.

The largest single revenue producer in this group was the gasoline tax, which brought in $961,000,000 in 1938. Liquor tax revenue amounted to second highest, yielding $838,000,000.

Of the $14,811,000,000 total, the federal government in 1938 collected $6,034,000,000; state governments $3,857,000,000; and local governments, $4,920,000,000.

Except for the federal customs duties on imports, the analysis showed, each of the ten major taxes is levied by more than one level of government, and many of them are levied by all three levels.

A significant phase of the report is the showing that property taxes are steadily declining. This indicates that, as has been repeatedly pointed out in these columns, something is radically wrong with this form of tax and that it is defeating its own purpose. Yet, as shown, it is one of the principal items of revenue, the base, in fact, from which all our too numerous taxes have sprung. Undoubtedly if the property tax had been more reasonably and equitably applied, there would be fewer other types of taxation.

Some Helpful Reading

IF the people of this country want to know the significance of what is happening in Washington—on Capitol Hill, in the White House, at the State department or at the departments of War and Navy—with respect to this country's position in the present war, all they have to do is read a few astoundingly revealing books written since the World war.

No better course of study could be adopted by every man and woman and grown child in the nation than one covering a half dozen or more books easily available at book stands and the libraries. The parallels between acts in 1915, 1916 and 1917 which dragged the United States virtually by the ears into the World war, and the day by day developments of 1939, are amazing enough to shock the most lethargic American living.

Five of these books are:

Raymond S. Baker's biography of Woodrow Wilson.
Charles C. Tansill's America Goes to War.
Robert Lansing's Memoirs.
H. C. Peterson's War Propaganda.
The Intimate Papers of Colonel House.

These five books—single not simply the opinion of one man, but documentary evidence books crammed with revealing diplomatic correspondence and intimate passages showing exactly what lies behind seemingly innocent moves—are so clear in their exposition of the dangers linked with every single move made by our government in international politics that they should be on the "must" list of every American who can read.

A reading of such books will leave no doubt as to the course this nation should follow to preserve its neutrality and remain at peace. To be aware of danger is one-half of the step to safety.

Germany's War Resources

IT is of interest in questioning Germany's ability to fight a long war to recall that similar doubts have figured in the discussion of every recent major conflict.

At the outset of the World war the unprecedented scope of the hostilities caused many to predict the economic collapse of all belligerents within a few months.

Italy's ability to subdue Ethiopia was doubted on grounds of its scant gold stock and limited resources.

During the Spanish war collapse was predicted alternately for both sides, until the Loyalists finally did collapse after two years of fighting Franco, Germany and Italy.

Japan's ruin was forecast with its invasion of China, but after two years it still carries on its war with forces totaling at least 1,000,000 men on Chinese soil.

It plainly would be foolish to reason by analogy that the data advanced to show Germany's economic vulnerability are all wrong. There can be no analogy between national economies which are as different in detail as the thumbprints of individuals. Besides, it is impossible to question such well-authenticated figures, for example, as those used by Col. Frederick Palmer to demonstrate the imminence of a German oil famine.

The uniformity of the historical pattern must be accepted, however, as proving at least this: It seems indicated that in any case of this kind even experts are not immune to wishful thinking in the use they make of statistics.

And the generalization seems justified that even the most conservative statistical conclusions may be upset by the ability of nations at war to accomplish prodigies unbelievable under any other circumstances.

If men will die for a national cause, they also will scrimp and starve and slave for a cause that claims their loyalty. Thus miracles occur and the economists are confounded.

Judgments of Germany's economic potential accordingly must be discounted by the extent of the imponderable but unignorable human factor. On the one hand, the wishful thinking, on the other hand, the question of national morale. Only time can measure German loyalty to the Nazi regime and willingness to sacrifice for it.

Predicting by Gadgets

AS the green of the countryside turns under the magic of fall into brown and red and gold, we are not permitted to forget that football games next. For the time being, the heralds of the greatest of autumn sports must be content with the inside pages, but within the space allotted to them they are doing themselves proud this year.

Something new is offered to the football world this season by the prognosticators. No longer do the fans have to depend on the predictions or guesswork of the prophets whose names are written high on the scroll of football fame. The newest contest before the actual contest is between mathematicians who have come up with devices which tell the story before it happens.

One of the oracles uses a slide rule, another an intricate difference-by-score rating system, and it is expected that the field will soon be invaded by others with magical and infallible wheels and gadgets. Unhappily, there remain many unbelievers who point out that no two of these "scientific" predictions agree, so it is evident that some of them will be proved wrong. Furthermore, the most likely respected among them already have come a cropper in the opening weeks of the season.

Past performance is no more certain a guide in football than in a horse race. But there is no denying that the charts and percentages and predictions of the wisecracks make interesting reading under the floor lamp and beside the cozy fireplace these cool October nights. But don't take them too seriously, anyway not seriously enough to wager hard cash with the thought of winning.

Belated Discovery

TESTIFYING before the Dies congressional committee, one Kenneth Goff of Wisconsin, who identified himself as a leader of the Young Communist League, asserted that he intended to resign from the league and from the Communist party at the conclusion of his testimony.

His reason for desertion of the Red cause is simplicity itself. He remarked he was motivated by a belief that the organizations are un-American.

That's a very logical point, but does one have to become actively un-American to discover it?

Senator Lunden's proposal that we take over British Islands in the Caribbean comes about twenty years late. It should have been made when the cards were being dealt out over the green table at the close of the World war.

Hitler has ordered a twenty-five-mile-an-hour speed limit throughout Germany. That's fast enough—since, with the country blockaded, the Germans aren't going anywhere, anyway.

Italy, it is reported, is losing its $150,000,000 tourist trade, due to the war. Evidently American vacationists are taking seriously that old saw about: "See Naples and die."

U. S. Treasury Sees Deficits Shaved by War—newspaper headline. Not if the Washington spenders continue their activities uncurbed.

That Great Blessing To Be Needed

By MARSHALL MASLIN

There is no greater blessing in life than to be greatly needed by someone.

You say to a fussy child: Will you help me with the string beans? Will you help me set the table? Will you hold this board while I drive a nail in it? and that child will probably smile.

You say to that smiling child: I don't know what I'd ever do without you, and the child grows before your watching eyes. Is happy, is proud, because that child has been told he is necessary in a parent's life, to a parent's joy.

A decent pride grows in the human spirit with the first awareness that it is needed, a pride that is strengthening and also humbling.

You ask what keeps a man going for years and years, though he is going either fast nor far, though his duties are slight and his position obscure. It is the awareness that someone needs him. At home there are young ones, a woman who has quiet pride in him—and that gives him strength that is reinforced from day to day. . . . You ask why a woman toils day in and day out, in sickness and in pain, and does the household chores that must always be done again. She knows that she is needed!

To make a man, woman or child happy, ask to be assisted, cry for help. To draw a human being close into your heart, USE him decently and honorably. . . . To break his heart, thrust him away; tell him he is needed no more; abandon him.

It is good to be needed and that is why the strong and the hard and the self-sufficient men and women have so few friends; are so pathetic when they weaken.

They have asked help from no man; they have riveted no friends to themselves, and at last they cry in their loneliness, "Doesn't ANYBODY need me?"

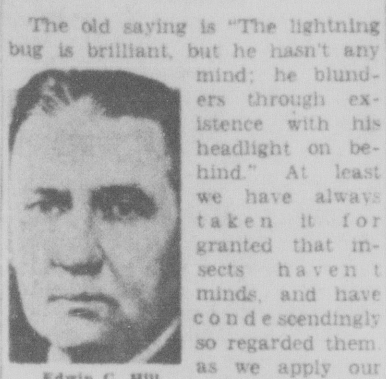

At the end of life they learn how good it is to be needed.

The Human Side Of the News

By EDWIN C. HILL

Edwin C. Hill

The old saying is "The lightning bug is brilliant, but he hasn't any mind; he blunders through existence with his headlight on behind." At least we have always taken it for granted that insects haven't minds, and have condescendingly so regarded them, as we apply our sovereign minds diligently to the work of obliterating our own species. But you never can be quite sure about anything in these days of fantastic change.

Here's evidence drifting into this corner that the Japanese beetle, now going off-shift and laying his eggs on velvet golf club greens, has a memory and something like reason and is altogether a lot smarter than anyone suspected, which is, of course, bad news for us of the opposition. I get the tale from a couple of certified young tree surgeons of Englewood who are first aid specialists for all growing things in distress. They are Joseph Varela and William Agnew, in a rock-and-sock battle with the Japanese beetle for the last two or three years, learning much about it, and admitting that it probably will be a long and disastrous war.

Is Intellectual Giant

Mr. Varela told me the story of how he learned that the beetle is somewhat of a giant intellect in the insect world.

"Driving around northern New Jersey," he said, "we found vineyards, trees and shrubbery gnawed down to plant skeletons by the beetle, where they had not been sprayed. Coming to a region of Italian truck gardeners, we saw that the grape vines and all other growing things were sound and whole with no sign of insect forage. We asked one of the gardeners what they used to keep off the beetles. 'Just flour,' he said. I had a hard time getting it straight, but finally got the explanation. Arsenate of lead and similar poisons for Japanese beetles can only be used with a spread—the vines are always white after spraying. The Italians had concluded that white must necessarily mean death to a beetle. 'The bug see something white and she scare,' 'She take the whole family and move quick. No more she eat our vines.'"

Whitened Leaves Avoided

"We were amused but tried some experiments. Leaves kept whitened with flour were never eaten. We would find beetles in the neighborhood but never coming near the white leaves. When someone wanted to have a small job of spraying done, with no great coverage, we would tell them to dust a little flour on the leaves. It was effective. We have learned something from the truck gardeners."

Mr. Varela trained at Fordham and widely experienced as an entomologist, says he wouldn't like to go on record as accepting all the surface implications of this incident, but both he and Mr. Agnew said their follow-up experiments indicated that the beetles were repelled by anything white. He's ready to let someone else work out this means in the way of bugs having memory, association of ideas and the implied abstract concepts of safety and well-being. But he feels sure that the spraying has been merely driving them somewhere else and not killing them. Spraying is still effective where it takes place, but not for the neighbor who doesn't spray. It merely starts the bug in search of green, and not white pastures.

Found by Bridges

Robert Bridges, the English poet, was tremendously interested in insects and their manner of life, studied them closely and found evidence of reason in some of their social arrangements. He put his conclusion about bees into a little poem:

"Bees were fully endowed with reason and only lost it.

By ordering so their life as to dispense with it.

Whereby it passed away and perished of disuse."

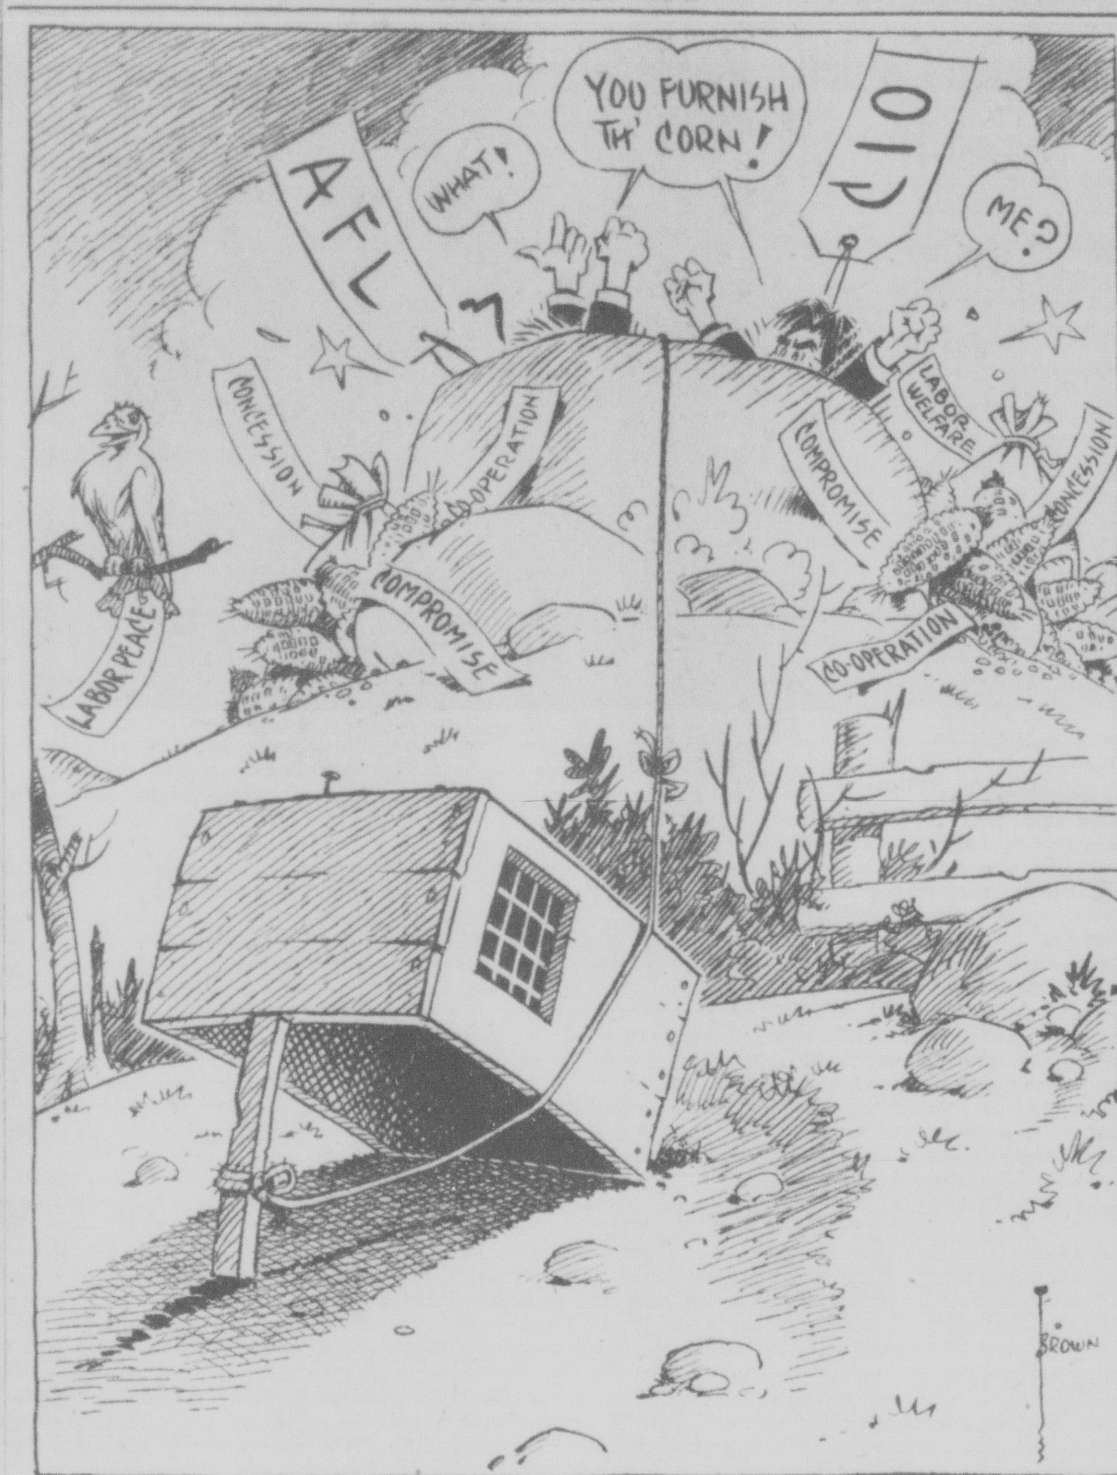

There are 500,000 species of insects and they have been around several hundred millions of years. Competition is stiff enough as it is—the great entomologist, Dr. L. O. Howard says they yet may be the winners in the planetary free-for-all—so let's hope that these bright beetles are just prodigies, and will pass, as do most of the Harvard prodigies, without making too much of a stir in the world. On the Record

By Former President Herbert Hoover

We need to keep cool. After all we must keep out of this war. We would be yielding the last stand of democracy if we go in, win or lose. We would have to yield to dictatorship during the war, and in a quarter of a century of impoverishment afterward we would get out of dictatorship. We would be destroying the possibility of being of aid in reconstruction of a demoralized world after it was all over.

THE UNBATED TRAP

White House Janizaries and New Deal Cohorts Keep Pushing the Third Term

Substitute For Peace

From the Christian Science Monitor

Some day nations will give up dueling as a means of settling their disputes, even as individuals have given it up. For reasonable men it was never more than a substitute for reason. And there are increasing evidences that for reasoning nations war is an unsatisfying substitute. The war now being waged—we almost said "in Europe" but really it is primarily still in thoughts and words—expresses a transition stage, in which peoples who all rush to rely on reason are struggling with certain governments which appear unwilling to abandon aggressive violence.

So we see the strangest war men have ever known, which might well be called a substitute for peace. For months there has been no genuine peace, but a continual threat of anarchy. However, in the struggle now going on, reason has by no means lost out. Even dictators are offering "something just as good" as real peace. They have to resort to reason in seeking their own people's support for violence. War admits itself a poor substitute for peace.

The great difficulty Mars is having in really getting started discloses mental conditions which are distinctly more encouraging than the technical existence of war would indicate. As the spiritual forces opposing war gain strength among Christian peoples they will find ways to deal with violence without resorting to violence. This thought is represented in the effort—it is not confined to one side—to avoid wholesale hostilities. It holds hope for a time when men will carry their rejection of substitutes for peace into more positive peacemaking, more self-sacrificing removal of war's causes, more active love for fellow men.

THE UNBATED TRAP

Should Forestall Runaway Prices

By HUGH S. JOHNSON

Washington, Oct. 16 — Fear of a rapid price increase due to war buying is expressed by both government and private economists. If the conditions existed here between the beginning of the World war and the time we got into it, return and nothing is done about it, runaway prices are possible.

Between July 1914 and April 1917, and due to European buying the all-commodity price index increased by seventy per cent, price indexes for grains increased by 143 per cent, iron and steel by 185 per cent, non-ferrous metals (copper, aluminum, etc.) by 144 per cent, chemicals by 110 per cent and bituminous coal by 171 per cent. After we entered the war and vastly multiplied the tremendous purchasing demand, the general index increased only thirty-two per cent, more the price index for grains declined sixteen per cent, iron and steel declined thirty-two per cent, non ferrous metals declined by forty-four per cent, chemicals remained the same, bituminous coal declined by thirty-six per cent.

A Magic Record
In view of the great shortage and insistent demand after our own unprecedented war-time purchasing program got under way, this is a magic record — unless you recall what happened to cause both results. It didn't happen anywhere else in the world. "Inflation" in other countries, as measured by the increased costs due to price increases as compared with our increases were as follows:

Associated Powers
excluding U. S. . . . 369 per cent
Central Powers . . . 336 per cent
U. S. (due largely to inflation before 1917) 217 per cent

Why and wherefore? Before we entered the war our markets were a madhouse of frantic competitive Allied bidding. Every nation wanted everything if not "day-before yesterday" at least "right now." The only way to get it was to outbid the other fellow. The vicious "cost-plus" contract relieved the producer of all care about where costs might go. He was counter-bidding also in both the labor and materials market. His customer paid the way and insured him a percentage of profit plus costs. The higher the costs the higher his profits.

More Frantic Competition
After we got into the war, our own varied purchasing bureaus and we had ten of them) started out to do exactly the same thing — frantically competing with each other for the same boss, Uncle Sam. It was squeezing the purse of our civilian population dry — especially of those on fixed incomes. It threatened to restore the condition of the southern college professor at Vicksburg whose year's salary in Confederate "shin-plasters" wouldn't buy a day's ration of cat meat for the family pet.

How was it stopped so effectively after we got into the war? By arbitrary price control? Only in a very minor degree. It was stopped principally by funneling purchases through a sort of governmentally regulated cartel.

Purchasing Centralized
The Allies were persuaded to leave their purchases to an Allied purchasing commission, the chairman of which was an American responsible to this government — instead of using competing international bankers. The requirements of our own governmental purchasing agents were required to be submitted to a central authority — the War Industries Board — and purchases of the same articles for government was forbidden to more than one agency which co-operated with the Allied purchasing agency.

Without attempting to fix prices, that stopped crazy excesses in competition.

Suggestion Is Offered
There is no such frantic export war demand — as yet. It is possible that there never will be. The Allies the better provided and more nearly self-contained. There are more sources of supplies open. Our own governmental purchasing program is not a drop in the bucket with 1918 and is under no such panic pressure. Governments should interfere with competition not one inch further than is necessary to protect our people. But if we neglect our lesson stated here and permit any such runaway price-soaring as happened from 1914 to 1917, we deserve what will happen to us.

Though this situation requires no arbitrary bureaucratic controls but it might be a good idea right now to require all purchase contracts by warring nations or government bureaus to be registered, stating prices, terms and conditions. Let's catch this possible condition before it runs too far to catch. This piece is written from intimate personal experience. It is neither theory, nor guessing.

leader of the radical Commonwealth Federation. He pointed out that last winter Mr. Costigan "got personal audiences with the president and Mrs. Roosevelt and ate two meals at the White House."

Mr. Hunt should not be so amazed. The White House family is not a bit particular who comes there for meals and tea. At least, that is what Mrs. Roosevelt has just indicated in explanation of testimony before the Dies committee that young Communists had been invited to the White House for tea and then undertook to capitalize on that connection Mrs. Roosevelt said she did not inquire of the political antecedents of her guests.

No Politics — by Republicans
All of this is recited merely to show that the much-publicized adjournment of politics that was urged by the Roosevelt administration was meant only to be observed by Republicans. The White House — the president's immediate family — his close associates and an assistant attorney general are carrying on plans to bring about a third term. Incidentally, Frank McHale, the campaign manager for pretty boy Paul V. McNutt, likewise has been as active as usual. It indicates what we can expect.

This also is recited to demonstrate that Mr. Roosevelt is not adverse to efforts to bring about a third term for him. Many persons doubt Mr. Roosevelt wants a third term. Maybe, but certainly he is not adverse to those under his direct control doing all they can to get a third term for him.

Not a word has come from Mr. Roosevelt in reply to Alf M. Landon's suggestion that if he really wants politics adjourned he should unqualifiedly take himself out of the third term race. Instead Mr. Landon has been assailed by the White House propagandists as "playing politics." Well, it seems to make a big difference whose politics is being played.

Allegany Trades Body Says The News Has Been Fair in Publishing Facts

Editor The Cumberland News:
At the last regular meeting of the Allegany Trades Council, held October 10, 1939, I was instructed to forward to you the decision of the Council in regards to news of interest to organized labor that is given out by the Council.

We have decided that in the future as in the past this organization will continue to give our news items to the public press for publication.

This organization has never at any time requested "The Voice of Labor" to print any news for us, and we have no intention of doing so. Since the beginning of my term of office as secretary of the Allegany Trades Council I have found that the Cumberland News has always printed any news items that this council wished them to carry in their columns.

In the future all news coming from the Council will not be official unless it comes through the president and secretary.

Thanking you for the publication of our news as it has been given to you I am,

Respectfully yours,

Chinese Destroy 100 Jap Planes

Shanghai, Oct. 17 (AP)—(Tuesday)—Chinese press dispatches assert- ed today that more than 100 Japa- nese airplanes were destroyed by a Chinese raid on Hankow Saturday.

Such a loss would be the heaviest yet suffered by the Japanese air force in the Chinese war.

The Chinese reports said that five Japanese planes were shot down during a thrilling 180-mile flying battle from Hankow to Ichang which followed the raid. The Chi- nese acknowledged that two Chi- nese planes were "damaged."

Chinese. The Domei report said twenty-one gasoline drums were ignited at the airport, but said there were no Japanese casualties and mentioned no plane losses.

Today semi-official Japanese ad- vices asserted that Soviet Russians manned at least one of the raid- ing bombers. The bodies of two downed outside the Japanese-oc- cupied territory.

Health to the Finger-Tips

By HELEN FOLLETT

WHEN a girl has the vermilion polish off long enough, she may observe that her finger-nails show fine ridges or that the shell-like substance is getting heavy and colorless. Blood streams aren't doing right by the pretty talons, or she has been using a soap that is too strong. A few minutes of the right kind of attention every night will bring a change for the better.

She can use a cuticle cream or fall back on our old friend, olive oil. By using one or the other, the nail substance will be softened, friction will bring back a normal color. Thumb in the beauty aid, doing little circles on the flesh, stroking the nail up and down.

Be fussy about the treatment given by the manicurist. If she pushes back the flesh and causes discomfort, cross her off your list of beauty attendants. To offset the drying effects of some liquid polishes, apply a little cream after they are on. It won't dim the glimmer and it will help to keep the claws in form.

Be a good child and eat your vegetables. They contain vitamins and minerals that do well by teeth, hair, complexion and finger-tip sheaths. The finicky eater who curls her nose at the dishes set before her has more beauty griefs than you can shake a stick at.

ROSALIND RUSSELL... keeps finger-nails beautifully manicured.

No redhead should wear light blue, which drains her complexion of coloring. It's taken for granted that the lady with auburn tresses must never wear red, but that's a mistake. If she hits on exactly the right shade she looks stunning.

Black is effective because it brings out the lights of her flaming top. Brown, an old-time favorite, is seldom flattering. Jade green is snappy, though it should be used as a decoration rather than the fabric of the frock.

If the hair is a coppery-red, the lipstick that is best suited is an orange-red. Fuchsia makes a fair skin look sallow. Grand for the brunette, doubtful on blondes.

When doing your exercises, concentrate on the torso. Arms and legs get a certain amount of exercise during the day's activities even if one is a lazy girl, but the mid-section doesn't get a bit.

Try torso twisting. Stand tall, hands on the hips, turn from side to side at the waistline. Stand facing a wall, up on your toes. Stretch your arms as high as you can; try to pull yourself apart in the middle. Lie on the floor, with the feet under a heavy piece of furniture. Lift the upper portion of your body, lower it slowly.

Don't ever forget that carriage should be splendid and regal all the time. The habit of carrying the tummy flat will strengthen muscles and lessen measurements.

How To Relieve Misery of Your CHEST COLD

Massage throat, chest, and back with plenty of Vicks VapoRub at bedtime. Then spread a thick layer on chest and cover with a warm cloth. VapoRub's double action brings double relief. It acts as a poultice to penetrate the surface skin; and its soothing medicinal vapors are breathed direct to the irritated air passages. Try it, to loosen phlegm—to clear air passages—check tendency to cough—and also to relieve the tightness and soreness of chest muscles. VICKS VAPORUB

Exchange Student Returns

Henry Van der Eb, football player (shown, left, in costume as a German student) is back at Harvard after spending his senior preparatory year as an exchange student in a Nazi military school, where he roomed with Joachim von Ribbentrop, Jr. (above), son of Germany's foreign minister. According to Van der Eb, relative merits of Germany and America were a nightly discussion, often resulting in near fist fights. Otherwise, they were quite friendly, he said, and he was often asked to dine at the Ribbentrop house, where he noticed plenty of meat, butter, eggs and other food-stuffs that good Nazis are supposed to use sparingly.

Gov. James Asserts Democracy Cannot Fail in America

Washington, Pa., Oct. 16 (AP)—Governor Arthur H. James told a crowd of 1,500 here that Democracy cannot fail as long as we stick to the ideals of Washington and Jefferson.

James, one of two governors awarded the honorary degree of doctor of laws by Washington and Jefferson College, said "that is not the dusk of Democracy, as so many would lead you to believe, but the dawn of Democracy."

Washington and Jefferson, he added, were "men of different political beliefs but both striving for the same objectives."

The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws also was conferred yesterday on Governor John W. Bricker of Ohio; Dr. Charles W. Wishart, president of Wooster, O., college; and Joseph C. Rovinsky, a director of the Chase National Bank of New York.

The degree of doctor of science was awarded General George C. Marshall, chief of staff of the United States army, and the Rev. Martin J. Hughes, pastor of the church of the Immaculate Conception, Washington, D. C., received the degree of doctor of divinity.

Shadow Over Hill House

By ELLIOTT FILLION

WRITTEN FOR AND RELEASED BY CENTRAL PRESS ASSOCIATION

SYNOPSIS

Mrs. Peake, proprietor of Hill House, New England summer resort, is found murdered by the "spite" of her son, Miss Ivy Newcomb. Previous to the murder the guests had been concerned about the poisoning of one of their number, Mrs. Rutherford, who recovered, strange sounds of a prowler on the property, and the ransacking of the rooms. Those at Hill House besides Dr. Neal and Josie Peake, children of the dead woman, are Sally Gordon, spending her first vacation there; her close friends, Rhoda and her fiancé Duncan; Dr. Paul and Pauline Rutherford, children of Mrs. Rutherford; Coral Easton, Bruce Orton and Joseph Barry. Josie is friendly with Alan Murray, who lives at Miss Ivy's, and that infuriates her brother, Neal. He likes Coral Easton, for whom Josie has no use. The police begin their investigation. The police chief enlists the aid of Miss Gordon, then introduces Captain Lancy, a known detective, who has been called in to take charge of the case. As Captain Lancy begins to question all those at Hill House, Miss Ivy pays a surprise visit. During a heated argument Miss Ivy collapses from shock and is taken home. Then Captain Lancy begins his questioning, a heated argument between Coral Easton and Josie breaks out during the detective's examination of Sally Gordon.

As Lancy nodded, Josie picked up the string of pearls and held them to the light.

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

LANCY SMILED gravely in answer to my avowal. "Ask me anything you want to. I'll answer."

"I think," he said slowly, "that you may allow all but Dr. Rutherford, Dr. Peake, Miss Peake and Miss Gordon to retire, Chief Forrest. Do you agree?"

The chief nodded and Lancy went on: "You may all go now. I shall want to talk to you again in the morning."

"I don't want to go to the cottage alone." It was Pauline who spoke. She had not said one word after her piteous outcry when Coral announced her engagement to Neal.

"I'll take you back, dear," Dr. Paul replied. "There is an officer there, Dr. Paul," I said. "Will you either have him bring Chloe back to the house or, if you want him to stay longer, will you bring her back yourself?"

He nodded and went into a huddle with Captain Lancy and Chief Forrest. I did not hear what they said, but as an officer was posted in the cottage that night I imagine that was the point under discussion.

"Sally," it was Neal speaking at my side. I had been so busy watching Joseph Barry with Coral that I had not seen him approach. "When Chloe comes in, will you ask her to make up the room next to yours in the wing. Coral is moving into the house."

"I will." "And Sally," Josie's hand was on my arm, her eyes looking pleadingly into mine. "Will you move upstairs into my room with me? I want YOU."

"I will." And this time I forced a smile to my lips. After the trust she had showed me, there wasn't anything I wouldn't have done for her.

"Now, Miss Peake," Lancy's voice spoke briskly. "Is there a room I can have for private interviews?"

"Certainly, Captain Lancy. Miss Gordon will attend to it, and," Josie spoke half shyly, "I shall be very grateful if you will stay here in the house until—everything—is settled." Her voice broke, steadied itself and took on a deeper note. "Captain Lancy, I'm afraid."

Just the one brief statement, but I'm sure it had more effect than if she had thrown a fit of hysteria. Lancy's eyes shone with admiration as he regarded the slender figure standing so quietly before him. Only her face, white and worn, and the terror lurking in her eyes, betrayed the strain she was enduring.

"Thank you. I will be very glad, indeed, to stay here, Miss Peake. It will make my work much easier. But, as there will be officers on guard here, I am sure you need fear no further outrage."

Josie's face did not lighten, though she gave him a grateful glance as she turned away. Then she stopped and came back to us. "I'm leaving everything to you, Sally. And, Captain Lancy, I'm going to my room until you are ready to talk with me. Is that agreeable to you?"

"It is. I'm interviewing Dr. Rutherford first, so that he may return to his mother. Then I wish to speak to you and your brother together."

"And Miss Gordon," Josie said

gravely. "I wish her present at my interviews."

"That is agreeable to me, if it is your wish," Lancy returned. "We want to talk with Miss Gordon anyway."

Josie went upstairs and I led the detective into Mrs. Peake's office. "Is this suitable?" I asked. "It is Mrs. Peake's office, and I would hesitate to put anyone else in here; but I presume that you will wish to go over her papers. Am I right?"

"Yes. But remember, Miss Gordon, to assure Miss Peake that we are only interested in anything which pertains to the murder. Contrary to general belief, the police, whether of state or town, do not pry curiously into private affairs."

"Thank you. I will tell her; but your assurance was not necessary."

As Lancy looked keenly at me, I said: "You see, Captain Lancy, your reputation is not unknown to my humble self."

"At that he smiled. 'I hope what you have heard is the truth,' he said mildly.

"I am sure it is," I returned, leaving him to speak to Chloe, who at that moment passed by the office door.

While Dr. Paul, who had returned with Chloe, was closeted with the detective and Chief Forrest, Neal, Chloe and I moved my things upstairs to Josie's room and prepared two rooms in the same wing for Coral Easton and Captain Lancy. As we worked I wondered what she would say when she learned the detective was in the next room. I may as well admit right here that I put him there deliberately.

I was suspicious of Coral. Not to the extent of believing her guilty of Mrs. Peake's murder, but I distrusted her on general principles. When I look back and realize how far from the truth were my feeble intuitions or deductions or just plain guesses, if you want to call them that, I am firmly determined never again to pass crack pot opinions on anyone.

We had scarcely finished with our moving and bed making, when a trooper came into the wing to tell us Captain Lancy was waiting for us. Neal sent him to rap at Josie's door, while I went into the kitchen with Chloe. Before she and I were satisfied, every window and door was locked and bolted, if there was a bolt. That done, she went to bed, and I returned to the office, turning off the lights as I went.

Captain Lancy, Chief Forrest, Neal and Josie were awaiting me. The latter, on a small wicker day-sport, moved to one side and patted the cushion beside her as I entered. I had no sooner taken my place than the detective spoke. His voice was much gentler than it had been earlier in the evening.

"Miss Peake, will you tell me what reason you have for believing that Miss Easton is the one who ransacked your room?"

Josie stared at him in utter astonishment. "How on earth do you know that I have a real reason?" she asked.

"I am sure of that from the way you spoke, and as it is not always wise to allow a person suspected to know your reason for such suspicion, I stopped your conversation."

Neal spoke gravely before Josie could reply. "Captain Lancy, I am sure Miss Easton has had nothing to do with any of the things which have happened here, and I cannot sit still and allow you to speak of her in such a slighting manner."

The brief silence was electric with tension. Then Lancy replied sternly.

"Dr. Peake, perhaps it will be better if you go out of the room for a few moments, while I discuss this matter with my sister. I have just this to say to you. I am here to find the person or persons who killed your mother. I do not care whom he may be. If it should develop that you or your sister is guilty, you will receive no more consideration from me than would any other. It is an impersonal matter to me, though to you it is far more. If Miss Easton is guilty, I shall prove her so. If she is innocent, she has nothing to fear from me. The innocent must be protected, the guilty must be punished."

He arose and walked to the door, opened it, and Neal, with white face and compressed lips, passed through.

"Now, Miss Peake?"

Briefly Josie told of the state of her room, or my offer to help her, and of my doing so while she sat and talked. "I went into the room tonight when I was looking for my mother." Her voice faltered. "I noticed something glittering on the floor. I picked it up and found—this." She extended her hand. In it lay a silken thread on which were four opalescent beads.

Lancy lifted the shining bit in his hand and looked at it. I craned my neck to see more distinctly, and suddenly remembered the dress Coral had worn at dinner the night I arrived. A billowing creamy chiffon bearing sprays of flowers formed of opalescent beads. There was something else, too, I almost remembered, or thought I did, for it nagged at me irritatingly as I listened to their conversation.

"You think this is hers?"

"I know it is. She had the dress on at dinner last night, the night my room was ransacked."

Lancy's face hardened. "Of course you understand, Miss Peake, that while she may have been the one who went through your room, she still may have had nothing to do with—what happened tonight."

"I know that. And for Neal's sake I hope she is innocent, but it makes you wonder, doesn't it?"

As Lancy nodded, she picked up the string of glittering beads and held it to the light. At that instant my evasive memory sprang to life. (To Be Continued) subject, as those words came up. In mathematics, for example, they had to be able to spell such words as "triangle"; in general science, "expansion"; in history, "Ponce de Leon."

Effect Excellent
The effect upon our boy was excellent. He studied the words and learned to spell them, rarely missing any; no one was allowed to go on in class until a certain minimal list had been thoroughly learned.

Best of all, there was a wholesome change. In making his notebook and doing his other written work at home, he exercised great care to spell each word correctly. "How do you spell —?" was asked of us a dozen times an evening. Occasionally he yelled the word to us in another room, and we yelled the spelling of it back. You say he should have looked up the spelling of these words? No! He might rather have chosen to let them go wrongly spelled. We were happy to encourage his spelling sense.

Spelling Habit
Any student who gets into the habit of finding out how each word, of which he has doubt, is spelled, is on his way to become a good speller. In case he can have sufficient encouragement at home and an adequate demand for mastering the accurate spelling of the technical words in every course at school.

Here we see a strong argument for closer home-school co-operation. Some parents would not want their children to bother them about words to be spelled, especially if they themselves are poor spellers. But if they saw their opportunity to encourage a very useful habit; if they desired to win a closer comradeship with their child, they would be happy to look up the spelling of some words themselves, proving to the child that they wished to share the learning experience with him.

Poor Spelling Is A Handicap for Child in School

No matter how apt a student may be, he is handicapped at school if he is a poor speller. His teacher in high school or college will be vexed at him and he, in turn, will be vexed at the colorful marks the teacher makes over his misspelled words. Gov. James Asserts Democracy Cannot Fail in America

Washington, Pa., Oct. 16 (P)—Governor Arthur H. James told a homecoming and founders' day crowd of 1,500 here that Democracy cannot fail as long as we stick to the ideals of Washington and Jefferson.

James, one of two governors awarded the honorary degree of doctor of laws by Washington and Jefferson College, said "that is not the dusk of Democracy, as so many would lead you to believe, but the dawn of Democracy."

Washington and Jefferson, he added, were "men of different political beliefs but both striving for the same objectives."

The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws also was conferred yesterday on Governor John W. Bricker of Ohio; Dr. Charles W. Wishart, president of Wooster, O., college; and Joseph C. Rovinsky, a director of the Chase National Bank of New York.

The degree of doctor of science was awarded General George C. Marshall, chief of staff of the United States army, and the Rev. Martin J. Hughes, pastor of the church of the Immaculate Conception, Washington, D. C., received the degree of doctor of divinity.

Shadow Over Hill House

By ELLIOTT FILLION

SYNOPSIS
Mrs. Peake, proprietor of Hill House, New England summer resort, is found murdered by the "emphatic" near her property by her estranged sister, Miss Ivy Newcomb. Previous to the murder the guests had been concerned about the poisoning of one of the rooms. Those at Hill House besides Dr. Neal and Josie Peake, children of the dead woman, are Sally Gordon, spending her first vacation there; her close friends, Rhoda and her fiancé, Duncan; Dr. Paul and Pauline Rutherford, children of Mrs. Rutherford; Coral Easton, Bruce Orton and Joseph Barry. Josie is friendly with Alan Murray, who lives at Miss Ivy's, and that infuriates her brother, Neal. He likes Coral Easton, for whom Josie has no use. The police begin their investigation. The police chief enlists the aid of Miss Gordon, then introduces Captain Lancy, well-known detective, who has been called in to take charge of the case. As Captain Lancy begins to question all of those at Hill House, Miss Ivy pays a surprise visit. During a heated argument Miss Ivy collapses from shock and is taken home. Then Captain Lancy begins his questioning. A heated argument between Coral Easton and Josie breaks out during the detective's examination of Sally Gordon.

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

LANCY SMILED gravely in answer to my avowal: "Ask me anything you want to. I'll answer."

"I think," he said slowly, "that we may allow all but Dr. Rutherford, Dr. Peake, Miss Peake and Miss Gordon to retire, Chief Forrester. Do you agree?"

The chief nodded and Lancy went on: "You may all go now. I shall want to talk to you again in the morning."

"I don't want to go to the cottage alone," said Pauline who spoke. She had not said one word after her piteous outcry when Coral announced her engagement to Neal.

"I'll take you back, dear," Dr. Paul replied.

"There is an officer there, Dr. Paul," I said. "Will you either have him bring Chloe back to the house or, if you want him to stay longer, will you bring her back yourself?"

He nodded and went into a huddle with Captain Lancy and Chief Forrester. I did not hear what they said, but as an officer was posted in the cottage that night I imagine that was the point under discussion.

"Sally," I was Neal speaking at my side. I had been so busy watching Joseph Barry with Coral that I had not seen him approach. "When Chloe comes in, will you ask her to make up the room next to yours in the wing. Coral is moving into the house."

"I will."

"And Sally," Josie's hand was on my arm, her eyes looking pleadingly into mine. "Will you move upstairs into my room with me? I want YOU."

"I will." And this time I forced a smile to my lips. After the trust she had showed me, there wasn't anything I wouldn't have done for her.

"Now, Miss Peake," Lancy's voice spoke briskly. "Is there a room I can have for private interviews?"

"Certainly, Captain Lancy. Miss Gordon will attend to it, and," Josie spoke half shyly, "I shall be very grateful if you will stay here in the house until—everything is settled." Her voice broke, steadied itself and took on a deeper note. "Captain Lancy, I'm afraid."

Just the one brief statement, but I'm sure it had more effect than if she had thrown a fit of hysteria. Lancy's eyes shone with admiration as he regarded the slender figure standing so quietly before him. Only her face, white and worn, and the terror lurking in her eyes, betrayed the strain she was enduring.

"Thank you. I will be very glad, indeed, to stay here, Miss Peake. It will make my work much easier. But, as there will be officers on guard here, I am sure you need fear no further outrage."

Josie's face did not lighten, though she gave him a grateful glance as she turned away. Then she stopped and came back to us. "I'm leaving everything to you, Sally. And, Captain Lancy, I'm going to my room until you are ready to talk with me. Is that agreeable to you?"

"It is, I'm interviewing Dr. Rutherford first, so that he may return to his mother. Then I wish to speak to you and your brother together."

"And Miss Gordon," Josie said

As Lancy nodded, Josie picked up the string of pearls and held them to the light.

gravely. "I wish her present at my interviews."

"That is agreeable to me, if it is your wish," Lancy returned. "We want to talk with Miss Gordon anyway."

Josie went upstairs and I led the detective into Mrs. Peake's office. "Is this suitable?" I asked. "It is Mrs. Peake's office, and I would hesitate to put anyone else in here; but I presume that you will wish to go over her papers. Am I right?"

"Yes, but remember, Miss Gordon, to assure Miss Peake that we are only interested in anything which pertains to the murder. Contrary to general belief, the police, whether of state or town, do not pry curiously into private affairs."

"Thank you. I will tell her; but your assurance was not necessary."

As Lancy looked keenly at me, I said: "You see, Captain Lancy, my reputation is not unknown to my humble self."

At that he smiled. "I hope what you have heard is the truth," he said mildly.

"I am sure it is," I returned, leaving him to speak to Chloe, who at that moment passed by the office door.

While Dr. Paul, who had returned with the detective and Chief Forrester, Neal, Chloe and I moved my things upstairs to Josie's room and prepared two rooms in the same wing for Coral Easton and Captain Lancy. As we worked I wondered what she would say when she learned the detective was in the next room. I may as well admit right here that I put him there deliberately.

I was suspicious of Coral. Not to the extent of believing her guilty of Mrs. Peake's murder, but I distrusted her on general principles. When I look back and realize how far from the truth were my feeble intuitions or deductions or just plain guesses, if you want to call them that, I am firmly determined never again to pass crack pot opinions on anyone.

We had scarcely finished with our moving and bed making, when a trooper came into the wing to tell us Captain Lancy was waiting for us. Neal sent him to rap at Josie's door, while I went into the kitchen with Chloe. Before she and I were satisfied, every window and door was locked and bolted, if there was a bolt. That done, she went to bed, and I returned to the office, turning off the lights as I went.

Captain Lancy, Chief Forrester, Neal and Josie were awaiting me. The latter, on a small wicker day-bed, moved to one side and patted the cushion beside her as I entered. I had no sooner taken my place than the detective spoke. His voice was much gentler than it had been earlier in the evening.

"Miss Peake, will you tell me what reason you have for believing that Miss Easton is the one who ransacked your room?"

Josie stared at him in utter astonishment. "How on earth do you know that I have a real reason?" she asked.

"I am sure of that from the way you spoke, and as it is not always wise to allow a person suspected to know your reason for such suspicion, I stopped your conversation."

Neal spoke gravely before Josie could reply. "Captain Lancy, I am sure Miss Easton has had nothing to do with any of the things which have happened here, and I cannot sit still and allow you to speak of her in such a slighting manner."

The brief silence was electric with tension. Then Lancy replied sternly.

"Dr. Peake, perhaps it will be better if you go out of the room for a few moments, while I discuss this matter with your sister. I have just this to say to you. I am here to find the person or persons who killed your mother. I do not care whom he may be. If it should develop that you or your sister is guilty, you will receive no more consideration from me than would any other. It is an impersonal matter to me, though to you it is far more. If Miss Easton is guilty, I shall prove her so. If she is innocent, she has nothing to fear from me. The innocent must be protected, the guilty must be punished."

He arose and walked to the door, opened it, and Neal, with white face and compressed lips, passed through.

"Now, Miss Peake?"

Briefly Josie told of the state of her room, or my offer to help her, and of my doing so while she sat and talked. "I went into the room tonight when I was looking for my mother." Her voice faltered. "I noticed something glittering on the floor. I picked it up and found—this." She extended her hand. In it lay a silken thread on which were four opalescent beads.

Lancy lifted the shining bit in his hand and looked at it. I craned my neck to see more distinctly, and suddenly remembered the dress Coral had worn at dinner the night I arrived. A billowing creamy chiffon bearing sprays of flowers formed of opalescent beads. There was something else, too, I almost remembered, or thought I did, for it nagged at me irritatingly as I listened to their conversation.

"You think this is hers?"

"I know it is. She had the dress on at dinner last night, the night my room was ransacked."

Lancy's face hardened. "Of course you understand, Miss Peake, that while she may have been the one who went through your room, she still may have had nothing to do with—what happened tonight."

"I know that. And for Neal's sake I hope she is innocent, but—it makes you wonder, doesn't it?"

As Lancy nodded, she picked up the string of glittering beads and held it to the light. At that instant my evasive memory sprang to life.

Spelling Habit

Any student who gets into the habit of finding out how each word, of which he has doubt, is spelled, is on his way to become a good speller.

In case he can have sufficient encouragement at home and an adequate demand for mastering the accurate spelling of the technical words in every course at school.

Here we see a strong argument for closer home-school co-operation. Some parents would not want their children to bother them about words to be spelled, especially if they themselves are poor spellers.

But if they saw their opportunity to encourage a very useful habit; if they desired to win a closer comradeship with their child, they would be happy to look up the spelling of some words themselves, proving to the child that they wished to share the learning experience with him.

Goose-Neck Goal Post On Grid Given Okeh

Would Revive Field Goal Kicking and Make for Open Game

By BILL BONI
New York, Oct. 16 (AP)—Asa Bushnell, commissioner of Eastern Intercollegiate athletics, told the metropolitan football writers today that he believed the best of all proposed rule changes would be a compromise settlement of the "goal posts back to the goal line" problem.

Bushnell recommended the use of goose-neck goal posts, with the uprights planted several yards back of the goal line as insurance against collision injuries, and the cross-bar directly over the goal line.

"That certainly would bring about a marked revival in field goal kicking," said the commissioner, "and would make for more open games."

Bushnell also said he was looking forward hopefully for the day when spectators would realize that penalties against their teams were breaks caused not by prejudiced officials but by rules infractions by the teams they were cheering.

If there's one thing a football coach can't guard against, it's "fumbleitis." He can teach a man how to hold a ball, how to carry it, how best to catch punts and passes. But once the boy goes into action and his signal is called or a football heads his way, that boy is strictly on his own.

There was an epidemic of fumbles last Saturday, and many of them played vital parts in deciding ball games. A Wisconsin fumble on the Badger nineteen set up Indiana's first of two touchdowns; Nebraska's way was paved to a 10-7 decision over Iowa State by a fumble; a fumbled kickoff was the starting point for Auburn's drive to an upset of Mississippi State, and Ernie Laine's fumble set off the Louisiana State march that brought the Tigers to a 7-9 victory over Rice.

Columbia, leading Army 6-0, fumbled on the Cadet four late in the first half to miss another score and possible victory; Texas Christian's Connie Sparks lost the ball three times in crucial spots as T.C.U. was nipped out by Temple, and a "made" fumble, when Pitt's Dick Cassiano missed a tackle but knocked the ball out of Robbie Robinson's arms, put the Panthers in position for the winning touchdown against Duke.

On opposite sides of the gridiron fence the Vanderbilt and Ursinus. The Commodores have scored 13 points in each of four games, yet they've won only one to tie one. The little Pennsylvania school, on seven points, has gained two victories and a tie.

Elbin's Conqueror in Semi-Finals to Oppose Hale-Berkenbaugh Winner

Merrill Golden advanced to the finals of the first flight in the fall golf tournament of the Fort Cumberland Club by defeating Elmer Elbin 5 and 4.

In the championship match, Golden will meet the winner of the contest between Jimmie Hale and J. T. Berkenbaugh. Hale, the medalist, topped his first-round test, defeating C. Maxwell 2 and 1, while Berkenbaugh won by default over W. J. Miller.

In the second flight, F. Creel Snider went to the finals with a 2 and 1 victory over Wynn George, who had previously eliminated Joe Mooney 2 and 1. Snider will meet the winner of the Leo Leasure-Edward George match for the title.

Carl King and New Parrish will battle it out for the third flight championship. In the semi-finals, King defeated Dan Staley 2 and 1 and Parrish eliminated Carl McIntyre 3 and 2.

Pirate Post for Wagner
Tribute to Great Player

Released by North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.
New York, Oct. 16 — One of the pleasantest things about the managerial switch in Pittsburgh recently, in which Pie Traynor was pushed downstairs, or maybe I should say around the corner, to make room at the tiller for Frankie Frisch, was the prompt renewal of Honus Wagner's contract as coach. Frisch authorized this move, and it goes to show that Frank appreciates not only the value of the Dutchman's brain and experience, but the place of honor he holds in Pittsburgh baseball history.

It wouldn't be right for the greatest of all Pirate ball players to be employed — or unemployed — elsewhere when there is room for him on the Pittsburgh club. Old Honus is a living monument to the golden age of buccaneer baseball — the days when Fred Clarke, a national idol and a peerless leader of the stature of Frank Chance, led his team to four pennants, and the Pittsburgh turf was churned by the spikes of Tommy Leach, Ginger Beaumont, Kitty Bransfield, Deacon Phillippe, George Gibson, and Babe Adams.

McGraw Called Wagner Greatest Player
Among all these, Clarke included, the flying dutchman stood incomparable. John J. McGraw, leader of the Pirates' mortal enemies of that generation, the Giants, always insisted that Wagner was the greatest player who ever pulled on a pair of baseball pants. McGraw watched Cobb, Speaker, Matty, Ruth, and the rest, and held firm to his original decision.

The Giant boss was in a position to judge, for he went back to the very beginnings of Honus's big league career. As a matter of fact, they overlapped as players—McGraw was just rounding out his high, hot spell at third base with the old fighting Orioles of Baltimore when Wagner broke in with Louisville in 1897.

Another judge of ball players—Max Carey, owner of one of the soundest brains the game has produced — puts the Dutchman on top of the list. Carey, a major figure in Pittsburgh history himself, says that Wagner was "the only 5-5-5 player" he ever saw or heard of.

As I've mentioned before, Carey rates players by a system of his own — for hitting, fielding, and base-running. Five points is perfect, or a full score, in each department. The rating of Babe Ruth under the Carey system, as I recall it, is 5-4-2. Naturally, the Babe did not shine as a base-runner, the branch of the game which is Carey's private fetish. Often he didn't have to run the bases. He took them at a dog-trot.

Tyrus Cobb rates 5-4-4, and George Sisler is close to perfect with 5-5-4. But the bowlegged Dutchman of Pittsburgh is unique in the Carey catalogue, the only 5-5-5 man in history.

One of the Best Base-Runners
You're apt to forget that Honus was one of the great base-runners of his time. Looking at him today — big, wide, clumsy, gray in the hair and rosy in the face, his vast equator falling over his belt and his legs more bowed than ever beneath it — it's hard to realize that once he was a thief and a terror on the sacks. For that matter, he didn't look the part in his prime. As ungainly a figure as you could hope to see, was Honus — until he started moving.

Wagner led the National League in batting eight times. He was peerless in the field, possessed of speed, the gift of anticipation, a strong throwing arm, and the finest pair of hands a ball player ever wore.

Four times Honus led his league in stolen bases — in 1902, with forty-three; in 1904, with fifty-three; in 1907, with sixty-one, and in 1908, with fifty-three.

The story has it that Ed Barrow, now president of the Yankees, saw the wide and graceless German kid throwing rocks with neighborhood boys, got him a job with the Paterson, N. J., club, and then recommended his slug to Louisville, of the National League, for $800. In 1900, Pittsburgh took over the Louisville franchise and fifteen of the Louisville ball players, including Mr. Wagner. The rest is history.

If you're a fan, you don't have to go back as far as Wagner's heyday yourself to thrill at the sight of the old Dutchman today, as he rolls off the bench to take the practice ball from the infield and rolls back again, resting his big hands heavily on the dugout roof for a moment to look at the crowd before he disappears. A civil war student would feel the same way if he saw Robert E. Lee riding past on his mare, Traveller.

Mr. Frisch has done well to hold the old place open for Honus. Like Wagner himself, Mr. Frisch makes a habit of doing things well.

Keller Made Many Other Teams Than Reds See "Red"

Maryland Mauler Was Given "Double-O" and "No, No" by Several

New York, Oct. 16 — The Cincinnati Reds lost the world series, all right, and as a result of the poor opposition they gave the New York Yankees suffered a great deal of embarrassment therefrom.

However, the hapless Reds weren't the only ones who were greatly embarrassed over what transpired during the five-day, four-game blitzkrieg staged by the men of McCarthy.

In fact, there seems to have been more red faces in the American league than in the National since the close of the series. And it's all due to the Yankees' rookie outfielder, Charley Keller, who turned the post-season games into a four-act comedy drama in which he was the bright particular star.

Keller, it seems, was looked at and turned down by almost as many ball clubs as there are in the American league. Anyway, there's been almost a daily news story to the effect that another club had been uncovered which could have had Charley but didn't want him.

The latest victim called upon to make explanation is none other than Oscar Vitt, manager of the Cleveland Indians. The story is that the Yanks wanted to trade Charley for Jeff Heath who was a whizzer-on-wheels in his first season last year with the Indians.

Vitt Overlooked Him
The trade, 'tis said, was offered last winter and the Cleveland club turned it down. This may look strange at first glance because Vitt had been manager of the Yankees' Newark, N. J. farm before coming to Cleveland and in that capacity had seen a good deal of Keller. In fact, while at Newark, Vitt was extremely high in his praise of Keller as a player. Then why was he turned down?

The answer is simple. Heath, up to last winter, had more or less proven he had great potentialities and Keller had not yet been tried in the crucible of major league competition. Such a swap would have brought Cleveland fandom, always extremely outspoken with its praise or criticism, down around the ears of the Indian manager.

Other American league clubs which at one time or another are said to have had a chance to get Keller but didn't are the Washington Senators and the Boston Red Sox. There have also been stories to the effect that the Brooklyn Dodgers, Pittsburgh Pirates and New York Giants once thought of making Charley their property.

Anyway, it's too bad there aren't 16 Charley Kellers — it might even up the big league races and world series somewhat.

McGraw Victim, Too
This business of major league clubs having had chances at a future star player and missing that chance has been overdone. There isn't a big league club and hardly a manager or scout who hasn't at one time or other let the golden opportunity go by.

The late John McGraw, we remember, was often the subject of stories detailing long lists of star players who mhe had had on his roster but let go only to have them turn up elsewhere as brilliant stars. The stories, however, failed to relate how many castoffs McGraw converted into great and valuable players for the Giants.

Probably the greatest baseball prize a man ever passed up was Babe Ruth and the man who turned a deaf ear to opportunity which was knocking with the Bambino's bat was that shrewd master of the game, none other than Connie Mack.

The late Jack Dunn, of the Baltimore Orioles, was a great friend of Connie's and he tried to get Mack interested in Ruth in 1914. Then an Oriole pitcher. The price was high but Dunn assured Mack the Babe was a bargain. Connie, however, wasn't having any — he was breaking up his club anyway, and the war in Europe looked like bad times might be ahead for baseball.

So Babe went to Boston first, then New York, and, finally, to baseball immortality.

The Trojans of Southern California are on the march again. Mighty last year the Trojans are as justly this season and tagged by most everyone as the team to beat for national championship.

Football observers overlook that first Trojan game, the 7-7 tie with Oregon. Not that the Webfeet are soft touches. And they didn't play over their heads, either. But the Southern California team apparently failed to click as it can and lacked the punch to take the tilt.

Bob Hoffman, a 190-pound half-back, and two-letter winner, is one of the best blocking backs in coast conference history. Bob Sangster has been first-string fullback for two years. He is very fast.

Al Kreuger, the gent who caught that Rose Bowl pass; John Stonebraker and Bob Winslow are experienced ends. Phil Gasper and Howie Stoelcher and John Thomas are two-letter winners at tackle; Ed Dempsey won a letter at center and Ben Sohn takes care of the other guard opposite Smith.

The rumors, few fast and furious some time ago that Jones, since 1925 head coach at Southern California is on the way out. But his fine record last year and a great squad this season may completely wipe out those rumors.

The Trojans still have coast conference games with California, Oregon State, Stanford, Washington and U. C. L. A., and an intercollegiate tilt with Notre Dame at South Bend.

N. E. Merchants Take City Title In Softball-Tilt

Defeat Post Pirates 6 to 2 In Game "To Decide City Crown"

The North End Merchants of the East Side Softball League, won the city championship last evening by defeating the Post Pirates of the South End Booster League, by the score of 6 to 2 at the Community Ball Park.

Allen Sheetz, Merchant ace hurler limited the Pirates to three hits and struck out nine. He was especially effective in the pinches. In the sixth inning, after putting himself in the hole by walking four men and forcing in a run, he struck out the next three batters. The North Enders made their two runs in the first on Hawes' single, Riehl's double and George Rice's single. After getting one more in the third, they clinched the game in the fifth with two more on a walk, an error and two singles.

"Snapper" Morris made the fielding feature of the game when he "aced" to deep left to pull down "Ed" Widdows' long drive which was labeled for a home run.

The fans were treated to a ball game which was played in the fast time of forty-five minutes. "Fast" Weltman pitched good ball, but was afforded spotty support. Post's minus several regulars.

Frank Riehl, with three for three and George Rice with two for three led the Merchant attack. No Post player had more than one single.

Goose-Neck Goal Post On Grid Given Okeh

By BILL BONI
New York, Oct. 16 (AP)—Asa Bushnell, commissioner of Eastern intercollegiate athletics, told the metropolitan football writers today that he believed the best of all proposed rule changes would be a compromise settlement of the "goal posts back to the goal line" problem.

Bushnell recommended the use of goose-neck goal posts, with the uprights planted several yards back of the goal line as insurance against collision injuries, and the cross-bar directly over the goal line.

"That certainly would bring about a marked revival in field goal kicking," said the commissioner, "and would make for more open games."

Bushnell also said he was looking forward hopefully for the day when spectators would realize that penalties against their teams were breaks caused not by prejudiced officials but by rules infractions by the teams they were cheering.

If there's one thing a football coach can't guard against, it's "fumbleitis." He can teach a man how to hold a ball, how to carry it, how best to catch punts and passes. But once the boy goes into action and his signal is called or a football heads his way, that boy is strictly on his own.

There was an epidemic of fumbles last Saturday, and many of them played vital parts in deciding ball games. A Wisconsin fumble on the Badger nineteen set up Indiana's first of two touchdowns; Nebraska's way was paved to a 10-7 decision over Iowa State by a fumble; a fumbled kickoff was the starting point for Auburn's drive to an upset of Mississippi State, and Ernie Lalin's fumble set off the Louisiana State march that brought the Tigers to a 7-9 victory over Rice.

Columbia, leading Army 6-0, fumbled on the Cadet four late in the first half to miss another score and possible victory; Texas Christian's Connie Sparks lost the ball three times in crucial spots as T.C.U. was nipped out by Temple, and a "made" fumble, when Pitt's Dick Cassiano missed a tackle but knocked the ball out of Robbie Robinson's arms, put the Panthers in position for the winning touchdown against Duke.

On opposite sides of the gridiron fence the Vanderbilt and Ursinus. The Commodores have scored 13 points in each of four games, yet they've won only one to tie one. The little Pennsylvania school, on seven points, has gained two victories and a tie.

In the championship match, Golden will meet the winner of the contest between Jimmie Hale and J. T. Berkenbaugh. Hale, the medalist, copped his first-round test, defeating C. Maxwell 2 and 1, while Berkenbaugh won by default over W. J. Miller.

In the second flight, F. Creel Snider went to the finals with a 2 and 1 victory over Wynn George, who had previously eliminated Joe Mooney 2 and 1. Snider will meet the winner of the Leo Leasure-Edward George match for the title.

Carl King and New Parrish will battle it out for the third flight championship. In the semi-finals, King defeated Dan Staley 2 and 1 and Parrish eliminated Carl McInyre 3 and 2.

Pirate Post for Wagner Tribute to Great Player

Released by North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.
New York, Oct. 16 — One of the pleasantest things about the managerial switch in Pittsburgh recently, in which Pie Traynor was pushed downstairs, or maybe I should say around the corner, to make room at the tiller for Frankie Frisch, was the prompt renewal of Honus Wagner's contract as coach. Frisch authorized this move, and it goes to show that Frank appreciates not only the value of the Dutchman's brain and experience, but the place of honor he holds in Pittsburgh baseball history.

It wouldn't be right for the greatest of all Pirate ball players to be employed — or unemployed — elsewhere when there is room for him on the Pittsburgh club. Old Honus is a living monument to the golden age of buccanier baseball — the days when Fred Clarke, a national idol and a peerless leader of the stature of Frank Chance, led his team to four pennants, and the Pittsburgh turf was churned by the spikes of Tommy Leach, Ginger Beaumont, Kitty Bransfield, Deacon Phillippe, George Gibson, and Babe Adams.

McGraw Called Wagner Greatest Player

Among all these, Clarke included, the flying dutchman stood incomparable. John J. McGraw, leader of the Pirates' mortal enemies of that generation, the Giants, always insisted that Wagner was the greatest player who ever pulled on a pair of baseball pants. McGraw watched Cobb, Speaker, Matty, Ruth, and the rest, and held firm to his original decision.

The Giant boss was in a position to judge, for he went back to the very beginnings of Honus's big league career. As a matter of fact, they overlapped as players—McGraw was just rounding out his high, hot spell at third base with the old fighting Orioles of Baltimore when Wagner broke in with Louisville in 1897.

Another judge of ball players—Max Carey, owner of one of the soundest brains the game has produced — puts the Dutchman on top of the list. Carey, a major figure in Pittsburgh history himself, said that Wagner was "the only 5-5-3 player" he ever saw or heard of. As I've mentioned before, Carey rates players by a system of his own — for hitting, fielding, base-running. Five points is perfect, or a full score, in each department. The rating of Babe Ruth under the Carey system, as I recall it, is 5-4-2. Naturally, the Babe did not shine as a base-runner, the branch of the game which is Carey's private fetish. Often he didn't have to run the bases. He took them at a dog-trot.

Tyrus Cobb rates 5-4-4, and George Sisler is close to perfect with 5-5-4. But the bowlegged Dutchman of Pittsburgh is unique in the Carey catalogue, the only 5-5-5 man in history.

One of the Best Base-Runners

You're apt to forget that Honus was one of the great base-runners of his time. Looking at him today — big, wide, clumsy, gray in the hair and rosy in the face, his vast equator falling over his belt and his legs more bowed than ever beneath it — it's hard to realize that once he was a thief and a terror on the sacks. For that matter, he didn't look the part in his prime. As ungainly a figure as you could hope to see, was Honus — until he started moving.

Wagner led the National League in batting eight times. He was peerless in the field, possessed of speed, the gift of anticipation, a strong throwing arm, and the finest pair of hands a ball player ever wore.

Four times Honus led his league in stolen bases — in 1902, with forty-three; in 1904, with fifty-three; in 1907, with sixty-one, and in 1908, with fifty-three.

The story has it that Ed Barrow, now president of the Yankees, saw the wide and graceless German kid throwing rocks with neighborhood boys, got him a job with the Paterson, N. J., club, and then recommended his sale to Louisville, of the National League, for $800. In 1900, Pittsburgh took over the Louisville franchise and fifteen of the Louisville ball players, including Mr. Wagner. The rest is history.

If you're a fan, you don't have to go back as far as Wagner's heyday yourself to thrill at the sight of the old Dutchman today, as he rolls off the bench to take the practice ball from the infield and rolls back again, resting his big hands heavily on the dugout floor for a moment to look at the crowd before he disappears. A civil war student would feel the same way if he saw Robert E. Lee riding past on his mare, Traveller.

Mr. Frisch has done well to hold the old place open for Honus. Like Wagner himself, Mr. Frisch makes a habit of doing things well.

Keller Made Many Other Teams Than Reds See "Red"

Maryland Mauler Was Given "Double-O" and "No, No" by Several

New York, Oct. 16 — The Cincinnati Reds lost the world series, all right, and as a result of the poor opposition they gave the New York Yankees suffered a great deal of embarrassment therefrom.

However, the hapless Reds weren't the only ones who were greatly embarrassed over what transpired during the five-day, four-game blitzkrieg staged by the men of McCarthy.

In fact, there seems to have been more red faces in the American league than in the National since the close of the series. And it's all due to the Yankees' rookie outfielder, Charley Keller, who turned the post-season games into a four-act comedy drama in which he was the bright particular star.

Keller, it seems, was looked at and turned down by almost as many ball clubs as there are in the American league. Anyway, there's been almost a daily news story to the effect that another club had been uncovered which could have had Charley but didn't want him.

The latest victim called upon to make explanation is none other than Oscar Vitt, manager of the Cleveland Indians. The story is that the Yanks wanted to trade Charley for Jeff Heath who was a whizzer-on-wheels in his first season last year with the Indians.

Vitt Overlooked Him

The trade, 'tis said, was offered last winter and the Cleveland club turned it down. This may look strange at first glance because Vitt had been manager of the Yankees' Newark, N. J., farm before coming to Cleveland and in that capacity had seen a good deal of Keller. In fact, while at Newark, Vitt was extremely high in his praise of Keller as a player. Then why was he turned down?

The answer is simple. Heath, up to last winter, had more or less proven he had great potentialities and Keller had not yet been tried in the crucible of major league competition. Such a swap would have brought Cleveland fandangos.

Always extremely outspoken with his praise or criticism, down around the ears of the Indian management.

Other American league clubs which at one time or another are said to have had a chance to get Keller but didn't are the Washington Senators and the Boston Red Sox. There have also been stories to the effect that the Brooklyn Dodgers, Pittsburgh Pirates and New York Giants once thought of making Charley their property.

Old Prof. Conducts Monday Morning Class

Football Coaches Discuss Outcome Of Many Contests

Winning Teams Praised For Fine Games Played Saturday

By WHITNEY MARTIN

New York, Oct. 16. (AP)—The sun was bright and the old Professor was almost that way as he put both hands behind his back and his best foot forward preparatory to addressing his Monday morning class of football coaches.

Old Professor—Good morning, gentlemen. Please excuse me if I seem a little foggy. I was up late with a sick friend. No, not Mr. Crowley, although he does look a little peaked. Are you ill, Mr. Crowley?

Am Crowley, Fordham. I felt fine. Professor, until five minutes after two last Saturday, when I began to see green spots before my eyes. Waves of them.

Old Professor—You weren't by chance playing Tulane?

Mr. Crowley—That's it, the Green Wave. Tulane had two strong teams and was just too much for us. The only difference I could see in the teams was Kellogg.

Red Dawson, Tulane—We showed great improvement and beat a great team, but our goal line punch wasn't so hot. We just played as if Fordham had been any other team.

Michigan Like Yankees
Old Professor—Very good, Mr. Dawson. Mr. Crowley, you may be excused. Mr. Anderson, what happened in that Michigan game you lost 27 to 7?

Eddie Anderson, Iowa—Was it Michigan we played? I thought it was the New York Yankees. We made three mistakes and Michigan scored on all three.

Pritz Crisler, Michigan—We're not that much better than Iowa, Professor. We were glad to get by them at all. It was Tom Harmon that did it.

Old Professor—It may have been Harmon but it took harmony too. Congratulations, Mr. Stevens, what are you dreaming about?

Mal Stevens, N. Y. U.—Fishing. I said before our game with North Carolina that it would be all right if General Starnes, their quarterback, would just go fishing. I haven't changed my mind.

Ray Wolf, North Carolina—That N. Y. U. game indicates it's taking our boys a long time to get over those 50-0 and 36-6 scores against Citadel and Wake Forest. N. Y. U.'s line outperformed us.

Old Professor—You seem quite pleased with yourself, Mr. Hollingsberry. Was it that win over Washington?

Babe Hollingsberry, Washington—The Huskies have a good ball club and I'm proud of my boys.

Jimmy Phelan, Washington—I knew we were in for a battle.

Old Professor—Mr. Kitts, have you changed your mind? Your boy Jimmy Jr. warned us: "I tell you, mister, my daddy won't have a statement."

L. S. U. Has Fine Team

Jimmy Kitts, Rice—That's right. All I'll say is that L. S. U. has a fine team.

Bernie Moore, L. S. U.—We were lucky, professor, but you have to be lucky to win these tough ball games.

Old Professor—You're right, Mr. Moore. Mr. Thornhill, you look fit to be tied.

Tiny Thornhill, Stanford—We were. But my boys looked 100 per cent better. The line outplayed UCLA. From here we expect to do much better.

Babe Horrell, UCLA—Stanford was unexpectedly tough. It's line outplayed us, but we'll come back.

Old Professor—Mr. Wade, please pay attention. What are you musing about?

Wallace Wade, Duke—I was just thinking, professor, that although we lost to Pitt, it was one of the finest games I've ever seen.

Charley Power, Pitt—Professor, I just can't believe we won. Naturally I'm tickled pink, but I still think we were mighty lucky.

Old Professor—You heard what Mr. Moore said about luck. Mr. Layden, didn't you comb your hair?

Play of Temple Praised

Elmer Layden, Notre Dame—Southern Methodist seems to like that stadium of ours, Professor. The Mustangs are very well coached, a fine team. Our blocking was better but we'll have to sustain it.

Matty Bell, S. M. U.—We had visions of a tie but it was a fine game, although tough to lose.

Old Professor—Nobody will argue that Mr. Meyer, have you any pointed remarks to make?

Dutch Meyer, T. C. U.—I'll say I have. Three losses by a total margin of seven points. Fred Swan has a grand fighting team, and it just wasn't in the books for us to win.

Fred Swan, Temple—Where! I'll never be the same. To describe the defensive play of Temple is beyond words. That pass interference bugaboo nearly ruined us again.

Old Professor—Well, we'll call it a day. Please don't disturb Mr. Crowley when you go to the waiting room. Good day, gentlemen.

New York, Oct. 16.—Just a year ago, at Syracuse, I saw a fast, powerful Cornell team driving on to victory against the men of the Orange.

Near the finish of a march, as the Cornell runner was on his way down, a thoughtful Syracuse end asked for the ball on a lateral, in the mix-up, the Cornell ball carrier, not expecting any such treacherous device, flipped the ball to his opponent, who was promptly under way in the other direction. Syracuse won the game—a 19-17 thriller.

Last Saturday, at Pittsburgh, after Duke had scored, the Blue Devils were again stepping up the field, deep in Panther territory. At this point, the game looked to be a 14-0 or maybe a 21-0 victory for Duke.

Then the same thing happened. As Wes McAfee, one of the extreme able McAfee group, was spinning outward, end Dickinson of the Panthers requested permission to handle the ball. So Wes flipped a lateral and Mr. Dickinson was on his way for some 47 yards and an ultimate touchdown that turned the game upside down.

A lateral game wrong can do untold damage, but it can bring even deeper grief when passed directly into enemy hands.

Old And New
After the game, Jack Sutherland and Wallace Wade were talking about the pressure put on modern football players that old-timers never knew.

"They mouse-trap the charging tackles," Jack said. "They set up false lures for the ends and backs. They keep every man on both teams geared to his highest mental pitch at all times. Just one mistake can lose a game. And it isn't any too easy to think in a hurry just after you've taken a number of hard bumps and have been badly jarred."

But the odds are now that few players will listen to a coddling voice asking for a lateral—unless it happens to be a close pal on one's own team.

Looking Ahead
What teams still have a chance to join the thinning ranks of the untied and unbeaten? Either Alabama or Tennessee must drop from the ranks on Saturday, barring a draw, and that will remove one of the main challengers. If Tennessee wins, Bob Neyland's main barrier will be L.S.U. at Baton Rouge. If Alabama gets safely by, the Crimson Tide still has Tulane and Georgia Tech to stop.

Tulane's Green Wave, which has done a good job so far, has much the rougher road—North Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama, Columbia and L.S.U. The tough spot for Mississippi will be Tulane. North Carolina has plenty left, including Tulane and Duke.

In the midwest, Michigan's two harder games are Minnesota and Ohio State. The Buckeye brigade meets much stouter opposition—Minnesota, Cornell, Indiana, and Michigan. All Notre Dame has in her rocky path are Navy, Carnegie Tech, Army, Iowa, Northwestern and Southern Cal. That's all.

In The East

Carnegie Tech has about the best chance in the east to get away unmarked—but it will be a justly scramble, with Notre Dame, Pittsburgh, N.Y.U., Holy Cross and Duquesne to head off.

Cornell's stout team might make it if Ohio State wasn't on the list—and Ohio State is top grade, the best Buckeye team in some years.

Texas A. and M. at present is the spearhead of the southwest, but Coach Norton's young men have six big games left in a state where anything can happen at a moment's notice. One of these waiting opponents is Southern Methodist, a team good enough to tie unwhipped Oklahoma and give Notre Dame the scare of her South Bend existence by the margin of a single point.

Harvard and Pennsylvania still remain unwhipped, but one of the two must fall this Saturday.

This should be one of the best games of the day. At any rate, we'll know a lot more about the Crimson after its afternoon with the Red and Blue. Dick Harlow apparently has his baffling attack working earlier this season, and even a good Penn team will have a dizzy time stopping it.

If Harvard can beat Penn, Harvard might drive on the rest of the way for one of her best years, where Dartmouth, Army, Princeton and Yale remain on her menu.

I doubt that Pittsburgh can get by both Fordham and Carnegie Tech. The Ram is due for a forward surge and the Titans are among the best we have.

The Busiest Squad
Elmer Layden's line-up at Notre Dame has had more thrills so far than any other.

A 3 to 6 victory over Purdue—16 to 14 over Georgia Tech—20 to 19 above Southern Methodist. Notre Dame has scored 30 points against three rugged opponents, and yet her winning margin is six points for all three victories—an average set at two points for each start. Each clash or crash has been a thriller that might have gone either way, but they all went in the general direction of South Bend.

The hustling Irish—and Notre Dame has a flock of them this fall—could use a breather now, but Notre Dame rarely knows what a breather is.

Plans To Drill Swimmers and Divers During Winter Months

Raymond J. "Ike" Law, swimming instructor and official, saw enough at the recent Western Maryland swimming and diving meet at the Celanese pool to convince him that Cumberland and residents of this section can compete with the best swimmers and divers in the country.

The drawback is that local aquatic enthusiasts lack the year around opportunity to swim and, with this in mind, Law has announced a plan to make Cumberland's mermen and mermaids swim-conscious the year around.

Law has secured permission to hold classes for special instruction in swimming and diving at the Central Y. M. C. A. pool here during the winter. Those desiring to take a course of instruction to brush up on their ability must be members of the "Y." Where special rates prevail for the use of the pool.

Laws services will be given throughout the course at a nominal fee.

He plans to hold classes three times a week at hours deemed best suited for girls and women, and for boys and men. On Saturday there will be two classes of instruction.

The days and hours for instruction will be announced until sufficient interest is manifested in the course of instruction.

Further information may be obtained at the Y. M. C. A. desk or from Mr. Law. It is his desire to get the classes under way as soon as classes can be organized.

Carried His Tacklers Along to "End of Line"

Here's the laugh of the week, inspired by an unknown grinner, and related by an official after the Syracuse-Georgetown game:

A back was returning the opening kickoff when he was hit amidstships by a small foe. Dragging him along, the back kept moving forward, until hit simultaneously by two other opponents. Down the four went in a heap, with the big guy on the bottom.

"O. K. boys, you can all get off now," he said. "This is the end of the line."

France's Sports Heroes Fighting "In the Army Now"

Plans To Drill Swimmers and Divers During Winter Months

Paris, Oct. 16. (AP)—Jean Borotra, the "bounding basque" of France's best Davis Cup teams, is delivering a different type of cannon-ball drive these days. As the commander of an artillery battery at the front, he is using a real cannon instead of a tennis racket.

Another member of the famous "four musketeers," Jacques Brugnon, also is an artillery captain in another part of the line.

Georges Carpentier, who will be remembered for having lasted three rounds with Jack Dempsey in Jersey City eighteen years ago, has left his Paris bar to become an aviation sergeant. "Gorgeous George" has kept in perfect physical condition since his retirement from the ring, despite a life of ease made possible by the profits from his bar—a rendezvous for cafe society off the Champs Elysees.

Marcel Thil, who held the world middleweight championship of the International Boxing Union, is using the husky forearm which battered his ring opponents silly to good advantage in an artillery factory in Champagne.

It is not surprising to see Thil in war service. It always has been a proud boast that he never dodged a fight. Canadian-American Lou Brouillard and some other Yankees who lost to him in France probably wish he hadn't kept his word so faithfully.

Georges Speicher and his sponsor in sport, Andre Leroux, parked their bicycles and marched off with the infantry. Leduc to become a machine-gunner.

Jules Ladoumeque, France's "wonder runner" who broke Paavo Nurmi's mile record and hung up five other marks, has become an infantry liaison sergeant in Lorraine.

Wrigley Asks Harinet For Plan on 1940 Cubs

Chicago, Oct. 16. (AP)—Phil Wrigley, owner of the Chicago Cubs, revealed today he had asked Manager Gabby Hartnett to submit a "program" designed to put the team back in the pennant fight in 1940.

Wrigley emphasized he had not asked for Hartnett's ideas for rebuilding the club. The owner disclosed he and the manager had a conference last Friday.

Knapp and Thomas Will Boss Orioles

Baltimore, Oct. 16. (AP)—Mrs. Jack Dunn, owner and president of the Orioles of the International League, announced today that Charles H. Knapp, Jr., vice president, and Tommy Thomas, field manager, would share the duties of general manager for the 1940 season.

Mrs. Dunn thus abolished the job formerly held by Jack Ogden, who resigned to accept a post with the Phillies. Thomas succeeded Rogers Hornsby as field manager.

Ladies League

In the games in the Ladies League on the Club Alleys, the Hearts won three of three from the Diamonds and the Spades took three of three from the Clubs.

Miss Kay Sherman of the Hearts paced her mates to the team's three wins over the Diamonds with a 363 score, while Miss Hotchkiss with a 373 total tied the Spades in their wins over the Clubs. High score for the evening in the league was topped up by Margaret Burns of the Diamonds with a 386.

Red Dawson, Tulane—We showed great improvement and beat a great team, but our goal line punch wasn't so hot. We just played as if Fordham had been any other team.

Michigan Like Yankees

Old Professor—Very good, Mr. Dawson. Mr. Crowley, you may be excused. Mr. Anderson, what happened in that Michigan game you lost 27 to 7?

Eddie Anderson, Iowa—Was it Michigan we played? I thought it was the New York Yankees. We made three mistakes and Michigan scored on all three.

Fritz Crisler, Michigan—We're not that much better than Iowa, Professor. We were glad to get by them at all. It was Tom Harmon that did it.

Old Professor—It may have been Harmon but it took harmony too. Congratulations, Mr. Stevens, what are you dreaming about?

Mal Stevens, N. Y. U.—Fishing. I said before our game with North Carolina that it would be all right if General Starnes, their quarterback, would just go fishing. I haven't changed my mind.

Ray Wolf, North Carolina—That N. Y. U. game indicates it's taking our boys a long time to get over those 50-0 and 36-6 scores against Citadel and Wake Forest. N. Y. U. line outcharged us.

Old Professor—You seem quite pleased with yourself, Mr. Hollingberry. Was it that win over Washington?

Babe Hollingberry, Washington—The Huskies have a good ball club, and I'm proud of my boys.

Jimmy Phelan, Washington—I knew we were in for a battle.

Old Professor—Mr. Kitts, have you changed your mind? Your boy, Jimmy Jr., warned us. 'I tell you, mister, my daddy won't have a statement.'

L. S. U. Has Fine Team

Jimmy Kitts, Rice—That's right. All I'll say is that L. S. U. has a fine team.

Bernie Moore, L. S. U.—We were lucky, professor, but you have to be lucky to win these tough ball games.

Old Professor—You're right, Mr. Moore. Mr. Thornhill, you look fit to be tied.

Tiny Thornhill, Stanford—We were. But my boys looked 100 per cent better. The line outplayed UCLA. From here we expect to do much better.

Babe Horrell, UCLA—Stanford was unexpectedly tough. It's the line outplayed us, but we'll come back.

Old Professor—Mr. Wade, please pay attention. What are you musing about?

Wallace Wade, Duke—I was just thinking, professor, that although we lost to Pitt, it was one of the finest games I've ever seen.

Charley Bowser, Pitt—Professor, I just can't believe we won. Naturally I'm tickled pink, but I still think we were mighty lucky.

Old Professor—You heard what Mr. Moore said about luck. Mr. Layden, didn't you comb your hair? You look like you just had a good shave.

Play of Temple Praised

Elmer Layden, Notre Dame—Southern Methodist seems to like that stadium of ours, Professor. The Mustangs are very well coached, a fine team. Our blocking was better, but we'll have to sustain it.

Matty Bell, S. M. U.—We had visions of a tie but it was a fine game, although tough to lose.

Old Professor—Nobody will argue that. Mr. Meyer, have you any pointed remarks to make?

Dutch Meyer, T. C. U.—I'll say I have. Three losses by a total margin of seven points. Fred Swan has a grand fighting team, and it just wasn't in the books for us to win.

Fred Swan, Temple—When I'll never be the same. To describe the defensive play of Temple is beyond words. That pass interference bugaboo nearly ruined us again.

Old Professor—Well, we'll call it a day. Please don't disturb Mr. Crowley when you go to the walling room. Good day, gentlemen.

The Sportlight

by GRANTLAND RICE

Released by North American Newspaper Alliance

New York, Oct. 16.—Just a year ago, at Syracuse, I saw a fast, powerful Cornell team driving on to victory against the men of the Orange.

Near the finish of a march as the Cornell runner was on his way down, a thoughtful Syracuse end asked for the ball on a lateral. In the mix-up, the Cornell ball carrier, not expecting any such treacherous design, flipped the ball to his opponent, who was promptly under way in the other direction. Syracuse won the game—a 19-17 thriller.

Last Saturday, at Pittsburgh, after Duke had scored, the Blue Devils were again stepping up the field, deep in Panther territory. At this point, the game looked to be a 14-0 or maybe a 21-0 victory for Duke.

Then the same thing happened. As Wes McAfee, one of the extremely able McAfee group, was spinning earthward, end Dickinson of the Panthers requested permission to handle the ball. So Wes flipped a lateral and Mr. Dickinson was on his way for some 47 yards and an ultimate touchdown that turned the game upside down.

A lateral game wrong can do untold damage, but it can bring even deeper grief when passed directly into enemy hands.

Old And New

After the game, Jock Sutherland and Wallace Wade were talking about the pressure put on modern football players that old-timers never knew.

"They mouse-trap the charging tackles," Jock said. "They set live furs for the ends and backs. They keep every man on both teams geared to his highest mental pitch at all times. Just one mistake can lose a game. And it isn't any too easy to think in a hurry just how you've taken a number of hard bumps and have been badly jarred."

But the odds are now that few players will listen to a coddling voice asking for a lateral—unless it happens to be a close pal on one's own team.

Looking Ahead

What teams still have a chance to join the thinning ranks of the undefeated and unbeaten? Either Alabama or Tennessee must drop from the ranks on Saturday, barring a draw, and that will remove one of the main challengers. If Tennessee wins, Bob Neyland's main barrier will be L.S.U. at Baton Rouge. If Alabama gets safely by, the Crimson Tide still has Tulane and Georgia Tech to stop.

Tulane's Green Wave, which has done a good job so far, has much the rougher road—North Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama, Columbia and L.S.U. The tough spot for Mississippi will be Tulane. North Carolina has plenty left, including Tulane and Duke.

In the Midwest, Michigan's two harder games are Minnesota and Ohio State. The Buckeye brigade meets much stouter opposition—Minnesota, Cornell, Indiana, and Michigan. All Notre Dame has in her rocky path are Navy, Carnegie Tech, Army, Iowa, Northwestern and Southern Cal. That's all.

In The East

Carnegie Tech has about the best chance in the east to get away unmarked—but it will be a jumpy scramble with Notre Dame, Pittsburgh, N.Y.U., Holy Cross and Duquesne to head off.

Cornell's stout team might make it if Ohio State wasn't on the list—and Ohio State is top grade, the best Buckeye team in some years.

Texas A. and M. at present is the spearhead of the southwest, but Coach Norton's young men have six big games left in a state where anything can happen at a moment's notice. One of these waiting opponents is Southern Methodist, a team good enough to tie unwhipped Oklahoma and give Notre Dame the scare of her South Bend existence by the margin of a single point.

Harvard and Pennsylvania still remain unwhipped, but one of the two must fall this Saturday.

This should be one of the best games of the day. At any rate, we'll know a lot more about the Crimson after its afternoon with the Red and Blue. Dick Harlow apparently has his baffling attack working earlier this season, and even a good Penn team will have a dizzy time stopping it.

If Harvard can beat Penn, Harvard might drive on the rest of the way for one of her best years, where Dartmouth, Army, Princeton and Yale remain on her menu.

I doubt that Pittsburgh can get by both Fordham and Carnegie Tech. The Ram is due for a forward surge, and the Titans are among the best we have.

The Busiest Squad

Elmer Layden's line-up at Notre Dame has had more thrills so far than any other.

A 3 to 0 victory over Purdue—14 to 14 over Georgia Tech—20 to 19 above Southern Methodist. Notre Dame has scored 30 points against three rugged opponents, and yet her winning margin is six points for all three victories—an average set at two points for each start. Each clash or crash has been a thriller that might have gone either way, but they all went in the general direction of South Bend.

The hustling Irish—and Notre Dame has a flock of them this fall—could use a breather now, but Notre Dame rarely knows what a breather is.

Aquatic Course Offered at "Y"

By R. J. 'Ike' Law

Plans To Drill Swimmers and Divers During Winter Months

Raymond J. "Ike" Law, swimming instructor and official, saw enough at the recent Western Maryland swimming and diving meet at the Celanese pool to convince him that Cumberlandians and residents of this section can compete with the best swimmers and divers in the country.

The drawback is that local aquatic enthusiasts lack the year around opportunity to swim and, with this in mind, Law has announced a plan to make Cumberlandians and residents of this section can compete with the best swimmers and divers in the country.

Law has secured permission to hold classes for special instruction in swimming and diving at the Central Y. M. C. A. pool here during the winter. Those desiring to take a course of instruction to brush up on their ability must be members of the "Y." Where special rates prevail for the use of the pool, Law's services will be given throughout the course at a nominal fee.

He plans to hold classes three times a week at hours deemed best suited for girls and women, and for boys and men. On Saturday there will be two classes of instruction.

The days and hours for instruction will be announced until sufficient interest is manifested in the course of instruction.

Further information may be obtained at the Y. M. C. A. desk or from Mr. Law. It is his desire to get the classes under way as soon as classes can be organized.

Carried His Tacklers Along to "End of Line"

Here's the laugh of the week, inspired by an unknown grinner, and related by an official after the Syracuse-Georgetown game.

A back was returning the opening kickoff when he was hit amply by a small foe. Dragging him along, the back kept moving forward, until hit simultaneously by two other opponents. Down the four went in a heap, with the big guy on the bottom.

"O. K. boy, you can all get off now," he said. "This is the end of the line."

France's Sports Heroes Fighting "In the Army Now"

Tennis Stars, Boxers, Cyclists and Runners Answer Call to Colors

Paris, Oct. 16. (P)—Jean Borotra, the "bounding basque" of France's best Davis Cup teams, is delivering a different type of cannon-ball drive these days. As the commander of an artillery battery at the front, he is using a real cannon instead of a tennis racket.

Another member of the famous "four musketeers," Jacques Brugnot, also is an artillery captain in another part of the line.

These are only two of the French sports celebrities who exchanged their sweatshirts for khaki when the war broke out.

Georges Carpentier, who will be remembered for having lasted three rounds with Jack Dempsey in Jersey City eighteen years ago, has left his Paris bar to become an aviation sergeant. "Gorgeous George" has set in perfect physical condition since his retirement from the ring, despite a life of ease made possible by the profits from his bar—a rendezvous for cafe society off the Champs Elysees.

Marcel Thil, who held the world middleweight championship of the International Boxing Union, is using the husky forearm which battered his ring opponents silly to good advantage in an artillery factory in Champagne.

It is not surprising to see Thil in war service. It always has been his proud boast that he never dodged a fight. Canadian-American Lou Brouillard and some other Yankees who lost to him in France probably wish he hadn't kept his word so faithfully.

Georges Speicher and his sponsor in sport, Andre Leroux, parked their bicycles and marched off with the infantry. Leduez to become a machine-gunner.

Jules Ladoumègue, France's "wonder runner" who broke Paavo Nurmi's mile record and hung up five other marks, has become an infantry liaison sergeant in Lorraine.

Wrigley Asks Harnett For Plan on 1940 Cubs

Chicago, Oct. 16. (P)—Phil Wrigley, owner of the Chicago Cubs, revealed today he had asked Manager Gabby Harnett to submit a program designed to put the team back in the pennant fight in 1940.

Wrigley emphasized he had not made up his mind about Harnett's status for next season, but simply had asked for Harnett's ideas for rebuilding the club. The owner disclosed he and the manager had a conference last Friday.

Knapp and Thomas Will Boss Orioles

Baltimore, Oct. 16. (P)—Mrs. Jack Dunn, owner and president of the Orioles of the International League, announced today that Charles H. Knapp, Jr., vice president, and Knapp Thomas, field manager, would share the duties of general manager for the 1940 season.

Mrs. Dunn thus abolished the job formerly held by Jack Ogden, who resigned to accept a post with the Phillies. Thomas succeeded Rogers Hornsby as field manager.

Stocks Move in Narrow Range As Traders Stay on Sidelines

Only a Few Issues Show any Signs of Ac- tivity

By FREDERICK GARDNER

New York, Oct. 16 (AP)—Stock market traders wouldn't buy or sell except in dribs and drabs today and the result was a generally narrow range of prices throughout the apathetic proceedings.

The last presented a spotty appearance at the start. Steels, air-rafts, rails and specialties then came in for a little attention, and modest advances to the close. Numerous stocks, however, finished unchanged to a shade lower.

The day's turnover of 485,390 shares was the smallest for a 5-hour session since Aug. 31. The Associated Press' average of 60 stocks was up 1 of a point of 52.1.

Helpful were estimates this week's steel mill operations would register another expansion to the highest rate since the week of May 24, 1937. Capacity activities in machine tool and airport plants were a bolstering influence as were early September railway net operating income figures. The Chrysler labor dispute, however, aroused fears the trouble might spread to other lines.

A notch higher in the curb were Lockheed, Gulf Oil and Jones and Laughlin. Electric Bond and Share and Newmont fell back. Turnover of 87,000 shares compared with 143,000 Friday.

Twenty-nine Fires Reported Raging in West Virginia Woods

75,000 Hunters Are Hindered by Dry Weather

Long Drought Makes It Difficult To Bag Game in Mountain State

Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 16 (AP)—Upland game found an ally today in the fall's long drought as 75,000 hunters tried to get their bag limit on the opening day of the 1939 season.

Weary sportsmen coming out of the woods reported it generally was so dry they had difficulty getting close enough to squirrel, grouse and turkey to make the kill.

That same weather, however, heightened danger in the state's forests already so dry that fires were burning underground in the northern counties.

State Forester D. B. Griffin reported twenty-nine fires started in the woods today. About 275 men were called to the fire lines and most of the fires were kept under control, he said. The absence of wind aided the fighters, but the weatherman promised three more days of continued drought.

Hunters Are Careless
Many of the fires were traced to carelessly handled campfires, apparently left by hunters who were anxious to get into the woods at dawn on the opening day.

Only squirrel grouse and turkey (in specified counties) became legal today. Quail and rabbit do not come in until November 7.

At least one serious hunting accident was reported for the opening day. Dave Bragg, twenty-four-year-old hunter of Irish-Corner, Raleigh county, was taken to a hospital with a critical abdominal wound.

He told attaches he stumbled while squirrel hunting and his gun accidentally discharged.

Sportsmen reported dogs had difficulty in working on grouse because of the extreme dryness, while squirrel easily kept out of gun's reach because of the noise hunters made going through the parched woodlands.

Largest Fire at Fenwick
Seventeen of the fires were in the Pocahontas district, comprised of counties which border on Virginia and Kentucky, Griffin said.

In the northern end of the state, fire fighters resorted to "trenching"—digging out the blaze—when the flames, fed on dry vegetation and went under the topsoil.

Twenty-nine Fires Reported Raging in West Virginia Woods

75,000 Hunters Are Hindered by Dry Weather

Long Drought Makes It Difficult To Bag Game in Mountain State

Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 16 (AP)—Upland game found an ally today in the fall's long drought as 75,000 hunters tried to get their bag limit on the opening day of the 1939 season.

Many sportsmen coming out of the woods reported it generally was so dry they had difficulty getting close enough to squirrel, grouse and turkey to make the kill.

That same weather, however, heightened danger in the state's forests already so dry that fires were burning underground in the northern counties.

State Forester D. B. Griffin reported twenty-nine fires started in the woods today. About 275 men were called to the fire lines and most of the fires were kept under control, he said. The absence of wind aided the fighters, but the weatherman promised three more days of continued drought.

Hunters Are Careless

Many of the fires were traced to carelessly handled campfires, apparently left by hunters who were anxious to get into the woods at dawn on the opening day.

Only squirrel, grouse and turkey (in specified counties) became legal today. Quail and rabbit do not come in until November 7.

At least one serious hunting accident was reported for the opening day. Dave Bragg, twenty-four-year-old hunter of Irish-Corner, Raleigh county, was taken to a hospital with a critical abdominal wound.

He told attaches he stumbled while squirrel hunting and his gun accidentally discharged.

Sportsmen reported dogs had difficulty in working on grouse because of the extreme dryness, while squirrel easily kept out of gun's reach because of the noise hunters made going through the parched woodlands.

Largest Fire at Fenwick

Seventeen of the fires were in the Pocahontas district, comprised of counties which border on Virginia and Kentucky, Griffin said.

Dash of Humor A Good Antidote For Puppy Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX, Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

With our youngsters going back to high schools and colleges, it's more than likely that many of them will find themselves experiencing the ecstasy they believe to be the "love of my life."

This mother's letter states a problem agitating a good many households at the present time:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"We saved, scrimped and did without, for our daughter to go to the state university. Last year was her freshman year. She did very well until the Easter vacation when she fell for a boy who didn't seem very promising to her father and me. We regarded it as a temporary fascination, or a case of 'puppy love,' and didn't take it too seriously.

"The boy lived in a distant part of the state, and we were thankful when vacation sent him home. They wrote frequently, and my daughter didn't seem to take an interest in any of the boys in our town.

Has Rotten Manners

"This hobbie-de-hoy who our daughter regards as a 'Prince Charming' has rotten manners. He never rises, even when he's introduced to a lady, wears his hat in our house, mumbles and says 'Uh huh!' And he hasn't any table manners, doesn't even know how to hold his fork properly. It was a question whether his Freshman grades were good enough to admit him to his Sophomore year. But unfortunately he did come back.

"My daughter is clever, was an excellent student before this affair began, is ambitious and could have a happy life, if it were not for this boy. Her father has forbidden him to come to the house, and I've told her positively she mustn't see him, though I feel sure she sneaks. We have spoken to the

"We're thinking of withdrawing our daughter from college and moving to another city, where my husband has business interests. The girl cries a great deal of the time and we're at our wits' end.

WORRIED PARENTS."

Aren't you adding another armful of kindling to the fire by the attitude you're taking? You're dignifying an ordinary case of "puppy love" into a great romance, making a Romeo and Juliet tragedy out of the grubby mutual attraction of a couple of kids. There's a contrary streak in human nature, which makes it hanker after the forbidden. You are, it seems to me, helping along this affair at top speed.

Have you thought of lifting the taboo and allowing the boy to come to the house, and at the same time inviting well-bred boys who know enough to remove their hats, stand for an introduction, or when a woman enters the room, and eat without getting a "fiddle grip" on their forks? It's more than likely that your daughter will see the difference, and the undesirable will show up for what he is—a rhinestone in the rough.

If he were a brilliant student, industrious, had ambition, I'd be inclined to overlook his lack of manners. But as you tell me he's stupid and lazy, as well as underbred, there really isn't much to hope for.

Humor An Antidote

A little restrained humor has been known to quash many an unpromising romance. But like vinegar in a good salad dressing, the humor should be applied with the hand of a miser. Utter ridicule applied to the boy will just line your daughter up more determinedly as his champion. Nature has made women defenders of the weak, unfortunate and the oppressed—until they marry them.

Your best bet is not to take this case of puppy love too seriously. Regard the affair a dash of humor, and here are my best wishes to you—Distributed by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

The appendix is that little tube, which hangs down from the large intestine, like the finger of a glove. So far as medical science can learn, it serves no useful purpose.

Appendicitis is caused from germs or some substance becoming lodged in the appendix, and setting up an infection. The first apparent symptom of appendicitis is a "stomach ache," and not necessarily in the right side, which persists and progresses into the more acute symptoms with temperature and nausea. The appendix is already in an infected state, and taking purgatives is one of the MOST HARMFUL AND DANGEROUS things you can do. You might some time save a life by remembering this. If the pain persists more than half an hour, call your doctor and follow his advice implicitly and promptly.

An operation for appendicitis is comparatively simple when not delayed. Most fatalities result from taking violent purgatives, or delaying operation until the appendix has burst and spread the poison into the abdominal cavity. Do not endanger the life of a loved one by DEBATING, when your physician advises an operation for appendicitis.

Dash of Humor A Good Antidote For Puppy Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX, Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

With our youngsters going back to high schools and colleges, it's more than likely that many of them will find themselves experiencing the ecstasy they believe to be the "love of my life."

This mother's letter states a problem agitating a good many households at the present time:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"We saved, scrimped and did without, for our daughter to go to the state university. Last year was her freshman year. She did very well until the Easter vacation when she fell for a boy who didn't seem very promising to her father and me. We regarded it as a temporary fascination, or a case of 'puppy love,' and didn't take it too seriously.

"The boy lived in a distant part of the state, and we were thankful when vacation sent him home. They wrote frequently, and my daughter didn't seem to take an interest in any of the boys in our town.

Has Rotten Manners

"This hoolie-de-hoy who our daughter regards as a 'Prince Charming' has rotten manners. He never rises, even when he's introduced to a lady, wears his hat in our house, mumbles and says 'Uh huh!' And he hasn't any table manners, doesn't even know how to hold his fork properly. It was a question whether his Freshman grades were good enough to admit him to his Sophomore year. But unfortunately he did come back.

"My daughter is clever, was an excellent student before this affair began, is ambitious and could have a happy life, if it were not for this boy. Her father has forbidden him to come to the house, and I've told her positively she mustn't see him, though I feel sure she sneaks. We have spoken to the Dean, but he can do nothing.

"We're thinking of withdrawing our daughter from college and moving to another city, where my husband has business interests. The girl cries a great deal of the time and we're at our wits' end.

WORRIED PARENTS."

Aren't you adding another armful of kindling to the fire by the attitude you're taking? You're dignifying an ordinary case of "puppy love" into a great romance, making a Romeo and Juliet tragedy out of the grubby mutual attraction of a couple of kids. There's a contrary streak in human nature, which makes it hanker after the forbidden. You are, it seems to me, helping along this affair at top speed.

Have you thought of lifting the taboo and allowing the boy to come to the house, and at the same time inviting to remove their hats, stand for an introduction, or when a woman enters the room, and eat without getting a "fiddle grip" on their forks? It's more than likely that your daughter will see the difference, and the undercurrent will show up for what he is—a rhinestone in the rough.

If he were a brilliant student, industrious, had ambition, I'd be inclined to overlook his lack of manners. But as you tell me he's stupid and lazy, as well as underbred, there really isn't much to hope for.

Humor An Antidote

A little restrained humor has been known to quash many an unpromising romance. But like vinegar in a good salad dressing, the humor should be applied with the hand of a miser. Utter ridicule applied to the boy will just line your daughter up more determinedly as his champion. Nature has made women defenders of the weak, unfortunate and the oppressed—until they marry them.

Your best bet is not to take this case of puppy love too seriously. Regard the affair a dash of humor, and here are my best wishes to you.—Distributed by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

AN INVALUABLE SIGNAL

WHEN The occasion for it is at hand, there is no more important signal than the use of a high or low card to indicate the suit to which your partner should switch his lead. If it is absolutely sure he is going to switch, a high card calls for his choice of the higher of two side suits and a low card indicates a preference for the lower ranking one.

Nelson Tribby, department adjutant, will be at the meeting. Mr. Shaffer is urging all ex-service men whether members of the Legion or not, to attend.

Immunize Children

Repeating last year's procedure Dr. M. D. Velde, of the United States Public Health Department has been in this county immunizing school children against scarlet fever. Dr. F. R. DuPuy, county health officer, has announced.

Assisting him in the work this year is Dr. Hornbrook, also of the United States Public Health Service. All children under eight years of age have been given their second dose of vaccine. There are three doses. Dr. DuPuy said.

Gas Tax $147,864.42

The board of county commissioners has received a letter from the auditor of the State Roads Commission stating that Garrett county will receive from the lateral gasoline tax fund for the year beginning October 1 the sum of $147,864.42 as this county's share of that fund.

The auditor also called the board's attention to the act of the legislature which compels the county to expend fifty per cent of the amount for construction of lateral or farm to market roads and the remainder for maintenance of county road system, debt service and appropriations to incorporated towns.

The commission also requested the board to plan and prepare a program for the coming year and submit it to the commission for consideration.

The APPENDIX

The appendix is that little tube, which hangs down from the large intestine, like the finger of a glove. So far as medical science can learn, it serves no useful purpose.

Appendicitis is caused from germs or some substance becoming lodged in the appendix, and setting up an infection. The first apparent symptom of appendicitis is a "stomach ache," and not necessarily in the right side, which persists and progresses into the more acute symptoms with temperature and nausea. The appendix is already in an infected state, and taking purgatives is one of the MOST HARMFUL AND DANGEROUS things you can do. You might save a life by remembering this. If the pain persists more than half an hour, call your doctor and follow his advice implicitly and promptly.

An operation for appendicitis is comparatively simple when not delayed. Most fatalities result from taking violent purgatives, or delaying operation until the appendix has burst and spread the poison into the abdominal cavity. Do not endanger the life of a loved one by DEBATING, when your physician advises an operation for appendicitis.

Cards of Thanks

We take this means of expressing our sincere appreciation to our friends and neighbors for the kindness extended to us during our recent bereavement, the death of our beloved husband and father, Mr. H. E. Reed, who passed away October 10, 1939. We especially wish to thank those who sent floral offerings and donated the use of their cars for the funeral. Your kindness at this time is more deeply appreciated than any word of thanks can express.

Once Was Enough, Says Wife Who Stabbed Male

Is Found Guilty Despite Plea Of Self-Defense

Trial of a 33-year-old Pekin woman on charges of stabbing her 23-year-old husband with a bread-knife marked an otherwise dull day in Circuit court yesterday.

In the only case tried by a jury, Mrs. Ethel Kelly Brooks was convicted of assault with intent to disable. She had been indicted on four other counts, including assault with intent to kill, assault with intent to maim, assault with intent to disfigure, and common assault, but the jury found her guilty on only the one count after about an hour's deliberation.

Her husband, Rex Brooks, testified that she had stabbed him in the back May 18 in the course of a quarrel over his use of her car. The wound prevented him from working at the Celanese until just last week, he said.

Tells Own Story

Taking the stand in her own behalf, Mrs. Brooks readily admitted she stabbed her husband, but maintained she had done it in self-defense.

Her husband had threatened to "mash" her, she declared.

Told by Defense Attorney Harold E. Naughton to tell her story in her own words, Mrs. Brooks turned to the jury and launched into a detailed recital of the events leading up to the stabbing. This she interspersed with remarks on how her husband had mistreated her on previous occasions and emotional appeals to the jury to believe her story.

A Bit of Fun

Finally, State's Attorney Morgan C. Harris objected that much of her testimony was "irrelevant."

"No, it isn't," Mrs. Brooks said sharply. "I'm telling what's the truth."

Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan sustained Mr. Harris' objection and told the defendant to confine her testimony to the material facts.

She said her husband was "mad" because she "bawled him out" in front of some other men for using her car "to haul drunks in."

Son Suggests Hatchet

The quarrel started in the kitchen, she said, in the presence of her 14-year-old son by a previous marriage.

The boy asked her what she was going to do and suggested that she get a hatchet to defend herself, she told the jury.

"No, I'll use this," she told him, reaching into a drawer and getting the bread knife.

Brooks called her a vile name, she went on, and started toward her, telling her:

"Self Protection"

Then she lunged at him with the knife, which plunged into his back as he wheeled to ward off the blow, according to Mrs. Brooks.

"I just did it to protect myself," she said.

Her husband maintained, however, that it was an unprovoked attack and denied that he had threatened her in any way.

Brooks said that he fell to his knees as she stabbed him. Then she twisted the knife in the wound and withdrew it.

He Thought He Was Dying

"I thought I was going to die," he declared.

Thinking she was going to stab him again, he got up, ran into the bedroom and locked the door until he heard his wife put the weapon away and ask him if he was hurt. He continued, she promised she wouldn't hurt him again, and he opened the door.

Mrs. Brooks drove him into the office of Dr. P. E. Berry in Piedmont, asking him not to say that she had stabbed him.

Under Peace Bond

The defense sought to show that Brooks had beaten his wife on previous occasions. After he had denied this accusation, defense Attorney Naughton asked him, over Mr. Harris' objections, if he was under a peace bond.

Brooks said he was.

Then, on re-direct examination, Brooks explained, over Mr. Naughton's objections, that there had been no hearing and no witnesses to substantiate his wife's claim that he had molested her.

Give and Take

Mrs. Brooks' cross-examination was marked by her tart answers to questions thrown at her by the state's attorney. She frequently parried his questions with other questions.

Asked whether she intended to kill her husband, Mrs. Brooks smiled and said, "No, I didn't intend to kill him."

But Mr. Harris' wring from her the admission that she "didn't care where the knife went."

She indignantly denied that she planned to stab her husband a second time.

"That's a lie," she shouted when Mr. Harris suggested it.

Once Was Enough

"You thought once was enough, did you?" the state's attorney inquired.

"Well, wasn't it?" was the defendant's retender.

Mrs. Brooks also admitted on cross-examination, having thrown a silver knife at her husband about a year previously. She stoutly insisted that she had done this, too, in self-defense.

Fourteen-year-old George Meyers, Mrs. Brooks' son by a previous marriage, substantially corroborated his mother's testimony.

10 Cumberlanders Attend Senators' Neutrality Scrap

Local Group Favors Retaining Embargo Plus Cash and Carry

Ten Cumberlanders journeyed down to Washington yesterday to add their voices to those of other Marylanders opposing repeal of the arms embargo.

Spokesman for the group was Rabbi Aaron H. Lefkowitz of B'Er Chayim Temple, who told Senators Tydings and Radcliffe that Cumberland and Western Maryland do not want the arms embargo repealed.

Instead, he said, the people he represented wanted added to it the provision that goods other than munitions shall be sold only on a cash-and-carry basis.

And by cash he declared he meant "cash on the barrelhead," not any ninety-day credit plan.

Others from here who helped pack the caucus-room in the Senate office building were the Rev. W. J. Hamilton, pastor of the Living Stone Church of the Brethren; the Rev. Jesse P. Dawson, pastor of Grace Methodist church; the Rev. W. R. Keefe Jr., pastor of Grace Baptist church; and Joseph E. May, M. S. Duncan, A. E. Lease, John Armstrong, Mrs. Marjorie Merrill, and Miss Evelyn McElfresh.

The neutrality method advocated by Rabbi Lefkowitz was substantially the program adopted at a peace rally at Fort Hill high school last week.

The Cumberlanders last night reported that the advocates of the embargo's retention outnumbered the Marylanders favoring repeal. One of the group said the anti-repeal delegation numbered about 200, the pro-repeal group, about 100.

The court also deferred passage of sentence on the aged woman's son, William "Easter" Crowe, indicted jointly with his mother.

Crowe pleaded not guilty to the charges and elected to be tried by the court rather than a jury.

Found Guilty on One Count

He was found guilty of an indictment charging him with sale and possession, not guilty of an indictment which charged him and his mother jointly with illegal possession.

Judge Sloan deliberated only briefly before announcing his verdict after state and county authorities told of making "buys" at the Crowe home, near the Maryland hotel in Lonaconing, and finding a

House Built on Rock Is Slipping, But Heskett Document Stands

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Valentine at 1514 Bedford road is built on a rock, as the parable recommends, but the Valentine a-bode is slipping.

This annoying fact was disclosed yesterday to the mayor and city council by Mrs. Valentine who wondered if something couldn't be done about it before her home crawls away like an Alpine glacier.

"Digging in the street" was declared responsible for the slippage by Mrs. Valentine. She said the digging had caused the walls to crack.

Paid $100 Once Before

Later, the fact was brought out that the Valentines had once been paid the sum of $100 by the city. The sum was paid after a sewer had been laid near their home. The sewer allegedly spued water on the four-story foundation of the home and loosened things up.

Further investigation into the matter revealed that the Valentines had signed a certain paper when paid the $100. The paper was drawn up by Charles Z. Heskett, the city attorney.

The investigation revealed that the Valentines had willingly agreed to the forever discharge the mayor and

A 70-year-old Lonaconing woman headed a long list of traversers who pleaded guilty yesterday as criminal trials got underway in Circuit court.

She was Mrs. Sarah Crowe, who pleaded guilty to charges of sale and possession of alcoholic liquor without a license.

Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan, who occupied the bench with Associate Judge William A. Huster, told Defense Attorneys Noel Speer Cook and Harold E. Naughton that he would pronounce sentence today.

The court also deferred passage of sentence on the aged woman's son, William "Easter" Crowe, indicted jointly with his mother.

Crowe pleaded not guilty to the charges and elected to be tried by the court rather than a jury.

Crash Demolishes Streamline Car; Hitchhiker, Two others Injured

A hitchhiker was one of three young men injured yesterday afternoon when the 1939 model streamlined car in which they were riding upset on a curve at Rawlings and was demolished.

The car, owned and driven by Paul D. Mellott, 23, of Bedford, Pa., to left the McMullen highway on the curve, ran up an embankment, and overturned.

Worst injured was Robert Harper, 18, of 223 Union street, who was hitchhiking back to Cumberland after visiting his mother in Thomas, W. Va. He suffered an injured back, cuts, and bruises.

Admitted to Hospital

All three were admitted to Allegany hospital. Harper was picked up and brought to the hospital by William Hollen, of Glenwood avenue. Stein's ambulance went after Mellott, and Bunner was brought in town by another passing motorist.

According to Bunner, Mellott had driven him to Catawba, W. Va., to visit his mother. He said he was employed by the York Construction Company of Bedford and Monday was his day off. They were headed back to Bedford.

Mellott is unemployed at the time.

Get X-Rays Today

Both Harper and Bunner will be x-rayed today to determine the extent of their injuries, hospital attaches said.

Harper's condition was reported "fairly good" last night. Mellott and Bunner were said to be "good."

City Firetrap Under Fire

Chief Orders Building Razed

Fire Chief Reid C. Hoenicka's attempt to eliminate what he considers a fire hazard on North Centre street was held up yesterday when Mayor Harry Irvine requested a full report on the case.

Action started when Hoenicka ordered Louis P. Saterokos, of 315 North Centre street, to tear down the firetrap he owns at 259 North Centre street.

In his letter to Saterokos, the fire chief wrote: "You are hereby notified that I have made an investigation of a certain building supposed to be owned by you on 259 North Centre street. This building is especially liable to fire hazard and must be removed on or before Oct. 20 unless this order is repealed by the mayor and council within ten days."

Saterokos appeared before the mayor and council and appealed the case. He offered to make needed repairs if the council ordered them.

"I didn't say anything as long as somebody was living in this home," Chief Hoenicka commented yesterday. "However, it is now vacant. It is a firetrap and would require a tremendous amount of repair work to make it safe."

Mayor Irvine ordered Engineer Ralph L. Rizer to inspect the structure and submit an estimate on the cost necessary to make the structure safe.

Lonaconing Test Case Avoided

Lonaconing, Oct. 16 (AP)—A court test of the state insurance commissioner's power to order "firetrap" buildings repaired or razed was averted today when a hotel owner who contended his authority agreed to make needed repairs.

Commissioner John B. Gontum had ruled the Maryland hotel, a Lonaconing landmark owned by George Stern, unsafe. Stern refused to repair or destroy the structure and sought an injunction to prevent Gontum's department from enforcing its order.

Stern, represented by his attorney, Edward J. Ryan, contended the insurance commissioner lacked authority to demolish a building without compensating the owner.

At a circuit court hearing Sept. 26, Stern was given until today to comply with Gontum's order or present arguments before Judge D. Lindley Sloan.

Today, Ryan announced repairs had been started and further improvements to fire-proof the building were contemplated. At the hearing, the state summoned more than a score of experts to testify the 40-year old structure was a "firetrap."

Reserve Officers Hold Election

The Western Maryland chapter of the Reserve Officers Association of the United States held its first meeting last night at the State Armory and elected Macon G. Williams, of Cumberland, to the presidency.

Other officers elected were Major John W. Fisher, of Westernport, senior vice-president; Capt. Walter M. Fuller, of Cumberland, second vice-president; Lieut. Fred N. McCamie, of Cumberland, secretary; Lieut. John H. Jackson, of Oakland, treasurer; and Lieut. Martin B. Sharp, of Cumberland, provost-marshal.

The new association adopted a constitution and voted to hold its meetings at the State Armory the third Monday of each month, with the exception of the December meeting which, because of the Christmas holidays, is scheduled the second Monday. By-laws will be adopted at next month's session.

Officials of the association's Department of Maryland were unable to be present, as planned.

An interesting program is promised, and all sportsmen are invited to attend, officers said last night.

Tax Collection Tempo Quickens With Prosperity

City Statement Shows Some Improvement Over Last Year

The quarterly report of City Auditor Arthur B. Gibson today had borne out the contention of Collector James M. Conway that folks are paying their taxes "easier this year than last."

According to the report, $308,296.46 had been collected by Sept. 30. This is 71.5 per cent of the taxes to be collected during the fiscal year ending March 31.

A total of $58,000 has been collected since Sept. 30. Mr. Conway said yesterday, leaving but slightly more than $77,000 to be collected between now and the last of March.

The Sept. 30 report of last year showed $301,461.69 already in the city coffers, which is slightly less than the figure for this year.

Hope Tempo Will Increase

Mr. Conway stated yesterday that the collections this year were undoubtedly coming in at a brisker clip and that judging by present business conditions and increased employment the collection would be accelerated even more before the fiscal year terminated.

According to the entire report of the city auditor, the ledger showed $632,777.37 in receipts and cash balance and $419,876.72 in disbursements.

This statement is all-inclusive, taking in taxes, licenses, permits, parking meters, theater fund, police fines, water rents and the various other sources of municipal revenue.

The amount of cash on hand as of Sept. 30 was $212,900.65.

New Water Line Big Item

The three major items noted on the disbursements list of the city auditor were: notes payable, the new cross-town water line, and the city's operating expenses.

A total of $78,904.02 had been put into the new water line as of Sept. 30, the report showed. City operating expenses were $130,620.13. An outlay of $85,000 was made for payable notes.

Officials at City Hall, including Mayor Harry Irvine, yesterday expressed their satisfaction with the quarterly report.

Mayor Irvine Comments

In commenting on the report, Mayor Irvine asked council members to keep tabs on the General Improvement Bond collections since the revenue to operate WPA is drawn from this account, which consists of lien collections.

Several months ago the council voted that $3,600 a month be taken from this account to finance WPA. To date, this has been managed in a satisfactory manner.

However, Mayor Irvine reiterated yesterday that this outlay would have to work from now on out. There will be no more bond issues regardless of whether the GIB collection bogs down or not, he said.

Romney Crash Victim Dies

Injuries received Sunday in an automobile accident near Romney, W. Va., proved fatal yesterday to a 37-year-old Romney painter, who never regained consciousness following the crash.

The victim, Newton B. Rannels, died at 2:30 p. m. at Memorial hospital, just twenty hours after being admitted.

Hospital attaches said Rannels suffered a fractured skull and crushed chest. His car apparently got out of control on a curve on West Virginia Route 28, plunged over a four-foot embankment, turned over several times and ran driverless in an open field for nearly 150 feet.

Mr. Rannels was a native of Higginsville, W. Va. He was a son of Mrs. Abbie Taylor Rannels and the late Edward Rannels.

Surviving, besides his mother, are two brothers, J. Howard Rannels, of Romney, and Ferman Rannels, of Cleveland, Ohio; his step-father, Joseph Strother; one half-brother, Robert Strother, of Romney; and four half-sisters, Mrs. Joseph Irving and Mrs. Mary Murphy, of Cumberland; Misses Gladys and Thelma Strother, of Romney.

The body was taken to Romney.

Community Center For Negroes Here Is Campaign Goal

A drive for funds for the construction of a negro community center here was launched last night at a meeting of the Cumberland chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at Frederick Street school.

Plans for the campaign, whose goal is $1,500, call for it to be climaxed at Thanksgiving with a dance and popularity contest.

NAACP officers said that the center will probably be constructed with WPA assistance.

Lewine M. Weaver, as president of the association, heads the campaign, with Mrs. Brady Jackson and Mrs. Annie Erwin as co-chairmen of the committee in charge.

Plans were also announced at last night's meeting for the establishment of an NYA-sponsored nursery-school for pre-school colored children in the near future.

Once Was Enough, Says Wife Who Slabbed Male

Is Found Guilty

Trial of a 33-year-old Pekin woman on charges of stabbing her 23-year-old husband with a bread-knife marked an otherwise dull day in Circuit court yesterday.

In the only case tried by a jury, Mrs. Ethel Kelly Brooks was convicted of assault with intent to disable. She had been indicted on four other counts, including assault with intent to kill, assault with intent to maim, assault with intent to disfigure, and common assault, but the jury found her guilty on only the one count after about an hour's deliberation.

House Built on Rock Is Slipping, But Heskett Document Stands

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Valentine at 1514 Bedford road is built on a rock, as the parable recommends, but the Valentine abode is slipping.

This annoying fact was disclosed yesterday to the mayor and city council by Mrs. Valentine who wondered if something couldn't be done about it before her home crawls away like an Alpine glacier.

"Digging in the street" was declared responsible for the slippage by Mrs. Valentine. She said the digging had caused the walls to crack.

Paid $100 Once Before

Later, the fact was brought out that the Valentines had once been paid the sum of $100 by the city. The sum was paid after a sewer had been laid near their home. The sewer allegedly spewed water on the fourposter foundation of the home and loosened things up.

Further investigation into the matter revealed that the Valentines had signed a certain paper when paid the $100. The paper was drawn up by Charles Z. Heskett, the city attorney.

Investigation revealed that the Valentines had willingly agreed to forever discharge the mayor and

Aged Woman Is Bootlegger

She and Son Both
Are Held Guilty

A 70-year-old Lonaconing woman headed a long list of traversers who pleaded guilty yesterday as criminal trials got underway in Circuit court.

She was Mrs. Sarah Crowe, who pleaded guilty to charges of sale and possession of alcoholic liquor without a license. Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan, who occupied the bench with Associate Judge William A. Huster, told Defense Attorneys Noel Speer Cook and Harold E. Naughton that he would pronounce sentence today.

The court also deferred passage of sentence on the aged woman's son, William "Easter" Crowe, indicted jointly with his mother.

Crowe pleaded not guilty to the charges and elected to be tried by the court rather than a jury.

Found Guilty on One Count

He was found guilty of an indictment charging him with sale and possession, not guilty of an indictment which charged him and his mother jointly with illegal possession.

Judge Sloan deliberated only briefly before announcing his verdict after state and county authorities told of making "buys" at the Crowe home, near the Maryland hotel in Lonaconing, and finding a

A hitchhiker was one of three young men injured yesterday afternoon when the 1939 model streamline car in which they were riding upset on a curve at Rawlings and was demolished.

The car, owned and driven by Paul D. Mellett, 23, of Bedford, Pa., left the McMullen highway on the curve, ran up an embankment, and overturned.

Worst injured was Robert Harper, 18, of 223 Union street, who was hitchhiking back to Cumberland after visiting his mother at in Thomas, W. Va. He suffered an injured back, cuts, and bruises.

City Firetrap Under Fire

Chief Orders
Building Razed

Fire Chief Reid C. Hoenicka's attempt to eliminate what he considers a fire hazard on North Centre street was held up yesterday when Mayor Harry Irvine requested a full report on the case.

Action started when Hoenicka ordered Louis P. Saterkos, of 315 North Centre street, to tear down the firetrap he owns at 259 North Centre street.

In his letter to Saterkos, the fire chief wrote: "You are hereby notified that I have made an investigation of a certain building supposed to be owned by you on 259 North Centre street. This building is especially liable to fire hazard and must be removed on or before Oct. 20 unless this order is repealed by the mayor and council within ten days."

Yesterday, on the tenth day, Saterkos appeared before the mayor and council and appealed the case. He offered to make needed repairs if the council ordered them.

"I didn't say anything as long as somebody was living in this home," Chief Hoenicka commented yesterday. "However, it is now vacant. It is a firetrap and would require a tremendous amount of repair work to make it safe."

Mayor Irvine ordered Engineer Ralph L. Rizer to inspect the structure and submit an estimate on the cost necessary to make the structure safe.

Lonaconing Test Case Avoided

Lonaconing, Oct. 16 (AP)—A court test of the state insurance commissioner's power to order "fire-trap" buildings repaired or razed was averted today when a hotel owner who contended his authority agreed to make needed repairs.

Commissioner John B. Gontum had ruled the Maryland hotel, a Lonaconing landmark owned by George Stern, unsafe. Stern refused to repair or destroy the structure and sought an injunction to prevent Gontum's department from enforcing its order.

Stern, represented by his attorney, Edward J. Ryan, contended the insurance commissioner lacked authority to demolish a building without compensating the owner.

At a circuit court hearing Sept. 26, Stern was given until today to comply with Gontum's order or present arguments before Judge D. Lindley Sloan.

Today, Ryan announced repairs had been started and further improvements to fire-proof the building were contemplated. At the hearing, the state summoned more than a score of experts to testify the 40-year old structure was a "fire-trap."

Tax Collection Tempo Quickens With Prosperity

City Statement Shows
Some Improvement
Over Last Year

The quarterly report of City Auditor Arthur B. Gibson today has borne out the contention of Collector James M. Conway that folk are paying their taxes "easier than last year."

According to the report, $30,296.46 had been collected by Sept. 30. This is 71.5 per cent of the taxes to be collected during the fiscal year ending March 31.

A total of $58,000 has been collected since Sept. 30, Mr. Conway said yesterday, leaving but slightly more than $77,000 to be collected between now and the last of March.

The Sept. 30 report of last year showed $301,461.69 already in the city coffers, which is slightly less than the figure for this year.

Hope Tempo Will Increase
Mr. Conway stated yesterday that the collections this year were undoubtedly coming in at a brisk clip and that judging by present business conditions and increase employment the collection would be accelerated even more before the fiscal year terminated.

According to the entire report of the city auditor, the ledger showed $532,777.37 in receipts and cash balance and $419,876.72 in disbursements.

This statement is all-inclusive, taking in taxes, licenses, permits, parking meters, theater fund, police fines, water rents and the various other sources of municipal revenue.

The amount of cash on hand as of Sept. 30 was $212,900.65.

New Water Line Big Item
The three major items noted on the disbursements list of the city auditor were: notes payable, the new cross-town water line, and the city's operating expenses.

A total of $78,904.02 had been put into the new water line as of Sept. 30, the report showed. City operating expenses were $130,620.13. An outlay of $83,000 was made for payable notes.

Officials at City Hall, including Mayor Harry Irvine, yesterday expressed their satisfaction with the quarterly report.
